COMMENT

Per the sample notice,"Once it is determined that you o your dependents are eligible for premium assistance ui Medicaid or CHIP, your employer's health plan is required to permit you and your dependents to enroll it the plan – as long as you and your dependents are eligi but not already enrolled in the employer's plan. This is called a "special enrollment" opportunity, and you mu request coverage within 60 days of being determined eligible for premium assistance." Special Enrollment opportunities are designed to provide opportunities for election of coverage or changes in elections based on employment status changes or change in family status results in a potential gain or loss of coverage. I am ver concerned that if eligibility for premium assistance is added to list of "Special enrollment" opportunities, the is no incentive to persue assistance until there is a char in health status. In other words, eligible emplioyees that waive coverage at initial enrollment or annual open enrollment, could easily wait until there is a health problem before seeking assistance. Many fully insured employer sponsored health plans do not have any preexsisting condition limitation period regardless of proc prior coverage. There can be first-day coverage for the insureds pre-exsisting condition even if there is no Pro of Creditable Coverage under the HIPAA guidelines. This, in conjunction with this "special enrollment' opportunity opens up employers, especially small employers, to an adverse selection environment. If all employees could wait until they have claims potential enroll in the employer sponsored plan, the plan would quickly reach an unexceptable loss ratio that will be reflected in higher renewal numbers. Eligibility for premium assistance should be tied to initial eligibility open enrollment to encourage employee participation i the employer plan before health issues become the driv force to pursue assistance.
