Hello-

Just sharing my comments to respond to a post on LinkedIn. It is important that mental health professionals earn an amount of pay at a rate that allows most professionals to comfortably pay off student loan debt. It is discouraging that psychologists who go through many years of school and training don't make all that much money that compensates for the stress level of the job. Given that there is a mental health crisis, fair pay would be more incentive for mental health professionals to stay in the field, stay satisfied in the field, help with burn out and create incentive for new mental health professionals.

Thanks for letting me share my thoughts.
