General Comment

I oppose any new regulations which hinder my ability to trade different types of securities or any type of option on securities. I agree if trading is done automatically by a broker for a client there should be some simple safeguards against conflicts of interest that may arise. However, if trading is done by the owner of an IRA, or other type of retirement account, in a self directed manner, then that owner should be able to remain using any type of financial vehicle offered by a broker to attempt to increase the value of that owner's account(s). Please do not hinder my ability to do with my own money as I deem fit. I would consider that a serious overreach of government authority.

Thank You,
Duane Myers
