General Comment

I suggest that you have no business restricting what I or an authorized adviser can place in my I.R.A. account. In particular, I occasionally sell cash covered puts and covered calls as a way of generating income or buying stocks at a lower cost. I also sometimes buy long dated LEAP calls as a means of limiting risk. I see no reason why you should interfere with my ability to continue this practice. I don't need any more "big brothers" in government looking over my shoulder while I save for retirement. Why don't you spend your time instead looking for regulations that you can rescind.
