Foreword

Thomas E. Perez
U.S. Secretary of Labor

In the 5 years he spent chained to a loom in his native Pakistan, no one ever asked Iqbal Masih to do anything but work. No one asked him to attend school. No one asked him to go play. No one asked him the most powerful of questions: “What do you want to be when you grow up?”

At the age of 10, he escaped slavery and became an impassioned advocate for children’s rights. Iqbal found his voice and was finally able to tell the world what he wanted to be when he grew up: “A lawyer,” he said, “to do what Abraham Lincoln did,” so that one day he could help free other children from bonded labor. (1)

Tragically, Iqbal never got that chance. At age 13, he was shot and killed by a gunman while riding a bicycle. This year marks the 20th anniversary of Iqbal’s death and 20 years of grants awarded by the U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL) to help eliminate the worst forms of child labor worldwide.

These grants provide children with the opportunity to access a quality education, which helps lift their vulnerable families out of poverty. They give children and their families a fighting chance to share in the benefits of the global economy. Melisa, a member of the Yánesha people, one of Peru’s indigenous communities in the remote district of Pichanaki, is a prime example.

Melisa was ready to drop out of school when she reached the ninth grade. Among other things, the arduous 6-hour commute to the nearest high school was making it nearly impossible for her to get an education. That changed thanks to the USDOL-funded Semilla (Seed) project, a partnership with the Peruvian Government, which allowed Melisa to finish high school by accessing a tutoring program. Last year, she won a prestigious scholarship from the national government and will receive a full scholarship to college to study sustainable tourism. Her goal is to bring greater economic development to her village.

We proudly provide technical assistance, through our Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor (CLEAR) project, to countries that have expressed an interest in receiving support to reduce child labor, including its worst forms. We help these nations act on the information and the suggested measures spelled out in the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor report. For example, the CLEAR project is supporting efforts to develop child labor training materials for labor inspectors in Paraguay; establish an Education Roadmap to Eliminate Child Labor in the Philippines; and conduct a National Child Labor Survey and pilot a monitoring system in Suriname.

In recent years, countries have made substantial progress in protecting children from exploitive work, in many cases assisted by projects similar to Seed and CLEAR. They have opened up primary education to more children and started to close the gap in girls’ education. Since 2000, the number of child laborers has dropped by one-third, while the number of children and adolescents out of school has been cut nearly in half.

Nevertheless, there is more work to be done. The International Labor Organization estimates that 168 million children worldwide still work, half of them in hazardous situations and 6 million of them in forced labor. Globally, there are also millions of children who are not working but are at risk of becoming child laborers because they are not in school.

This 14th edition of USDOL's Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor, prepared by our Bureau of International Labor Affairs in accordance with the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA), documents both the progress made and the challenges remaining. The report describes the efforts of 140 countries, non-independent countries, and territories to address exploitive labor through legislation, enforcement, policies, and programs. And it recommends steps these governments can take to bolster their efforts.

In particular, our 2014 report highlights programs and policies governments can implement, drawing from innovative practices across the globe, to help children go to school, stay in school, and avoid exploitive work. USDOL funds a global project to support governments that are committed to these kinds of programs.

This year, we also want to expand the reach and accessibility of our report by launching a smart phone app. We hope the app will educate more people about the challenges of eliminating the worst forms of child labor, offering a new tool in the struggle for the rights of children and the livelihoods of their families.

Kailash Satyarthi, a native of India whose three decades of work defending children's rights earned him the 2014 Nobel Peace Prize, used his acceptance speech last December to issue a call to action: to "globalize compassion and set our children free." It is time, he said, for "all the governments, intergovernmental agencies, businesses, faith leaders, the civil society, and each one of us, to put an end to all forms of violence against children. Slavery, trafficking, child marriages, child labor, sexual abuse, and illiteracy have no place in any civilized society."

At USDOL, we are doing everything possible to heed Kailash's call. Ours is a multi-pronged approach – including technical assistance, research and reporting, and policy engagement – combining to create a holistic strategy for combatting this global scourge. The inspiring examples of Iqbal and Kailash further motivate us, with resolve and a sense of urgency, to continue fighting this fight.

U.S. Department of Labor's Mandate

The U.S. Department of Labor (USDOL) has prepared this 14th annual report on the Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor in accordance with the Trade and Development Act of 2000 (TDA).<sup>(2)</sup> The TDA expanded country eligibility criteria for several preferential tariff programs to include the requirement that beneficiary countries implement their commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.<sup>(3)</sup> The expanded country eligibility criteria apply to the following trade preference programs: the Generalized System of Preferences (GSP) program authorized under the Trade Act of 1974; the Africa Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA); and the U.S.-Caribbean Basin Trade Partnership Act (CBTPA).<sup>(4-5)</sup> The TDA mandated the Secretary of Labor to report on each “beneficiary country’s implementation of its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.”<sup>(2)</sup> ILAB carries out this responsibility on behalf of the Secretary.

Report Overview

This report is divided into five parts. Part I provides highlights and gaps in government actions to address the worst forms of child labor as described in this year’s report, with an emphasis on progress globally and by region. Part II provides an overview of the U.S. experience on child labor. Part III describes the method for compiling the report and a description of the features of each country profile, including country assessments to provide the President with clear indications of the Secretary of Labor’s findings on whether each beneficiary country has advanced efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Part IV contains reference material for data on child labor and education that appear in the report, and a glossary of terms used. Part V covers the individual profiles of the countries that benefit from trade preferences under the TDA.

Part 1 The Year in Review: Giving a Voice to Millions of Children in 2014

This was the appeal made by Kailash Satyarthi, a longtime child labor activist from India, upon accepting his Nobel Peace Prize on December 10, 2014.<sup>(6)</sup> His vision for a world in which all people, including children, get the opportunity to share in global prosperity, and in which children are protected and nurtured, was also embraced by the Pakistani co-recipient of the Prize, Malala Yousafzai. She spoke out against the exploitation of children and issued a call to action for them to advocate for their own rights: “Let us become the first generation to decide to be the last, let us become the first generation that decides to be the last that sees empty classrooms, lost childhoods, and wasted potentials.”<sup>(7)</sup>

The children cited by the 2014 Nobel Laureates include an estimated 168 million child laborers around the world.<sup>(8)</sup> According to the ILO, about 85 million of these children are engaged in various types of hazardous work – including some who dig and drill for 24-hour shifts in gold mines, spray toxic pesticides on crops, or pick up trash on the streets. Another six million children are estimated to be in forced labor – where they are used as soldiers, carpets weavers, in commercial sexual exploitation, and other activities, such as drug trafficking.<sup>(8)</sup> Child labor exists in every region of the world. It is most common in the agricultural sector, although many children are also exploited in work in the industrial and service sectors, and other areas.<sup>(8)</sup> Most child laborers do not work for pay, and 70 percent are engaged in unpaid household services, often combining work with schooling, or not attending school at all.<sup>(8)</sup> Combining work with education often puts demands on children that make it difficult to achieve their full potential in school.<sup>(9)</sup>

Exploitive child labor occurs for many reasons, the most common being poverty.(9,10) Children living in poor households work to help their families cover basic costs of living, such as housing, food, child care, or health care. Children also engage in exploitive labor because they cannot afford the costs of schooling, their school is too far away, it is not a safe or healthy place, or adequately staffed or equipped to meet their learning needs.(9,10) Where schools are available, the quality often is poor, so that parents do not see the benefits of an education. In other cases, children end up in exploitive work due to cultural reasons or because they are the victims of violence or environmental, health, or economic crises, such as natural disasters.(9) Exploitive child labor is also a problem in areas where employers find it cheaper or easier to use children to work and where national laws and policies are lacking or not being enforced effectively.(10)

In 2014 and early 2015, there were children in all regions of the world who were involved in child labor because of these and other factors. It is estimated that tens of millions of children were affected by violence from major conflicts, the most grievous being in the Central African Republic, Iraq, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, Nigeria, South Sudan, and the Syrian Arab Republic, but also in long-lasting conflicts in Afghanistan, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Somalia, and Yemen.(11)

Jeannette, age 17, dropped out of school when she was 14 and went to work on a plantation as a tea picker. She said the job, which started at 7 a.m. and ended at 3 p.m. was “very hard and tiring”. Now Jeanette is studying in the REACH-T Model Farm School program funded by USDOL in Rwanda. “I thank the project for the skills I am gaining now” she said when asked about her experience in REACH-T. © REACH-T and school closures affected 5 million children, some children turned to work to support themselves or their families.(12-14) In Vanuatu, which experienced massive destruction from Cyclone Pam, approximately 82,000 children were left without housing, food, or water, putting them at higher risk of involvement in the worst forms of child labor; in Nepal, it is estimated that nearly 1 million children were killed, injured, kept out of school, or trafficked as a result of the massive April 25, 2015 earthquake.(15, 16) Finally, at the U.S.-Mexican border, more than 50,000 unaccompanied minors were found having left the Northern Triangle countries (Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador) to escape violence and economic insecurity.(17) On their journey north, many of these children were made vulnerable to, and became victims of exploitation and abuse, including trafficking for forced labor.(17)

While child labor continued to be a serious problem in many areas of the world during the reporting period, experience has shown that child labor can be reduced or eliminated by tackling the root causes of poverty and addressing the vulnerability of households to economic shocks through education, social protection, and decent work strategies.(18) Education, in particular, has been identified as a successful strategy for helping children to avoid child labor because it reduces the time that children have available to engage in exploitive work. Education also helps them to acquire the skills they need to secure stable jobs with fair pay and participate actively as citizens in their communities.(10, 19) As adults, they are likely to live longer, be less dependent on social support, and pass on the benefits of an education to their children.(10)

The global community recognized the importance of improving access to education for all children and combating poverty when it included “Eradicate extreme poverty and hunger” and “Achieve universal primary education” in the eight Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) in 2000. Since then, extreme poverty rates have fallen in every developing region, and the number of out-of-school children has dropped. In the period from 2000 to 2012, the number of child laborers also fell by almost one third. (8) However, notwithstanding this progress, 1.2 billion people still live in extreme poverty, and 58 million children are still not able to access even a primary education, much less a secondary education.(20, 21)

The ILO’s World Day Against Child Labor, held on June 12, 2015, focused on the importance of free, compulsory, and quality education as a key component in the fight against child labor. Participants called on governments to take action to ensure that their education and employment policies make it possible for all children to participate in school, at least up to the age of legal employment.(19) According to the ILO’s World Report on Child Labor 2015: Paving the Way to Decent Work for Young People, having the opportunity to get an education is essential to ensure that children have better prospects for decent work in the future and the chance to break out of poverty.(22)

This 14th edition of the Findings of the Worst Forms of Child Labor describes the actions taken by 140 countries in 2014 to meet their international commitments to address the worst forms of child labor and how they compare globally and across regions.

1.1 GLOBAL ANALYSIS OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS AND COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

This section provides global trends in government efforts and country assessments, including changes in assessments among USDOL’s 2012-2014 Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor reports.

1.1.1 Government Efforts

During this reporting period, 115 out of 140 governments covered in this report made at least one meaningful effort in advancing the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Fifty-nine governments made efforts in the areas of laws and regulations, 54 governments made efforts in the area of enforcement, 39 governments made efforts in the area of coordination, 62 countries made efforts in the area of government policies, and 66 countries made efforts in the area of social programs.

Establishing a clear, strong legal framework that conforms to international standards is critical for governments’ efforts to prevent and eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Therefore, this section gives special attention to the ratification of international standards and the adoption of corresponding national legislation.

While policies and social programs can prevent children from being forced to work at an early age, legal minimum age requirements for work help protect children from early entry into the workforce. While the majority of governments have established a minimum age for employment, there are several countries that have yet to establish a minimum age for employment, and many more whose minimum age falls below international standards. ILO C. 138 sets a minimum age for employment to be no less than 15 years, but allows a minimal legal working age of 14 for countries where economic and educational facilities are insufficiently developed.

Seven governments have yet to establish a minimum age for work or the status of their new minimum age law is unclear: India; Niue; Norfolk Islands; Pakistan; Saint Helena, Ascension and Tristán da Cunha; Tokelau; and Tonga. Eight governments maintain an age that falls below the international standard for developing countries of 14 years of age: Belize, Bhutan, Bolivia, Dominica, Guatemala, Montserrat, Nigeria, and the Solomon Islands. Similarly, 12 governments have yet to establish a minimum age for children involved in hazardous work: Algeria, Christmas Island, Cocos (Keeling) Island, Djibouti, Grenada, Niue, Norfolk Island, Seychelles, Tokelau, Tonga, Trinidad and Tobago, and Vanuatu, as required by ILO C. 182, while another 24 governments maintain an age below the international standard of 18 years of age or do not have a minimum age.

Although there is no international standard for a compulsory education age, not having one, or setting it too low, may encourage children below the legal age of employment to work since they are not required to attend school. While the majority of governments have established compulsory education ages, 15 countries have yet to establish such an age: Bhutan, Botswana, Burundi, Cambodia, Côte d'Ivoire, Eritrea, Ethiopia, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, the Solomon Islands, Somalia, Swaziland, Vanuatu, Zambia, and Zimbabwe, and 24 countries maintain ages below the international standard for the minimum legal working age of 14.

Ratifications of relevant international conventions signal governments' commitment to having in place a solid legal framework that can help to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. To date, 113 countries that are covered in this report have ratified ILO C. 138, including one which ratified during the reporting period (the Solomon Islands). In addition, 124 of the governments in this report have ratified ILO C. 182, one of which ratified during the reporting period (Somalia). Twenty-six governments have yet to ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, and 31 governments have yet to ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict.

Addressing gaps in countries' legal frameworks on child labor is a necessary but incomplete element for meeting the global goals of eliminating the worst forms of child labor. A commitment among governments to combat child labor must be upheld not only in law but also in practice. As such, the country assessments in this report take into account the full spectrum of instruments that a government must employ to effectively eliminate the worst forms of child labor: laws and regulations, enforcement mechanisms, coordination, government policies, and social programs.

1.1.2 Country Assessments

Figure 1 provides a global breakdown of the country assessments in this report. Overall, more than half of the countries (58 percent) received an assessment of Moderate Advancement or higher, compared with 39 percent of countries that received an assessment of Minimal Advancement or lower. The other 3 percent of countries received a No Assessment. Out of the 140 countries covered in this report, 13 received an assessment of Significant Advancement, 69 received Moderate Advancement, 43 received Minimal Advancement, 11 received No Advancement, and 4 were not given an assessment.

Among the 11 countries that received No Advancement, 8 countries received No Advancement because no meaningful actions were taken to advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Three others received this assessment, notwithstanding efforts made, as a result of government complicity in forced child labor: South Sudan, Eritrea, and Uzbekistan.

140 countries

KEY

- Significant Advancement
- Moderate Advancement
- Minimal Advancement
- No Advancement
- No Assessment

One territory, Wallis and Futuna, was marked No Assessment because there was no evidence of a worst forms of child labor problem and the territory has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor. Other territories were not assessed due to their small population size. For example, the British Indian Ocean Territory does not have a permanent civilian population, Heard Island and McDonald Islands are uninhabited, and the Pitcairn Islands has a population of fewer than 50 people.

The assessment results from 2014 indicate both progress and setbacks in addressing the worst forms of child labor compared with the assessments from 2013 and 2012 (see Figure 2). Overall, from 2013 to 2014, the number of countries that received an assessment of Significant Advancement remained steady, the number receiving an assessment of Moderate Advancement and No Advancement dropped, and the number of countries that received an assessment of Minimal Advancement increased. For example, in 2014, 82 countries received assessments of Significant and Moderate Advancement, as opposed to 85 in 2013, while 43 countries received an assessment of Minimal Advancement, as opposed to 37 in 2013. However, 11 countries received an assessment of No Advancement compared to 13 in 2013.

With regard to progress, all 13 countries receiving an assessment of Significant Advancement made meaningful efforts in the areas of legislation and enforcement in 2014, but also made one or more significant efforts in other areas assessed: either coordination mechanisms, policies, or programs to address child labor.

Of the 13 countries at this level, 10 had received the same assessment in 2013: Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, El Salvador, Peru, the Philippines, South Africa, and Uganda. The remaining three countries in the Significant Advancement group, Madagascar, Paraguay, and Thailand, increased their assessment level from Moderate Advancement in 2013 to Significant Advancement in 2014. In addition, 15 countries increased their assessment level from Minimal to Moderate Advancement in 2014: Cabo Verde, Comoros, Republic of Congo, Haiti, Mozambique, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Serbia, Solomon Islands, Somalia, Timor-Leste, Togo, Uruguay, and Yemen. Three countries that had Significant Advancement levels in 2013, Albania, Costa Rica, and Tunisia, dropped to Moderate Advancement in 2014. In addition, 19 countries dropped from Moderate Advancement to Minimal Advancement in 2014. The countries in this group were: Armenia, Belize, Bolivia, Burundi, The Gambia, Georgia, Kiribati, Kyrgyz Republic, Liberia, Macedonia, Malawi, Maldives, Mauritius, Russia, Samoa, Senegal, Suriname, Tanzania, and the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. The drop in assessment level for these countries occurred largely because of the lack of efforts during the reporting period in the areas of legislation, government coordination, and enforcement to address the worst forms of child labor.

The number of countries receiving No Advancement decreased from 13 in 2013 to 11 in 2014. Of the countries that had received No Advancement in 2013, the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Cook Islands, Seychelles, and Venezuela increased their assessment levels in 2014; while the British Virgin Islands; Eritrea; Falkland Islands;

Montserrat; Norfolk Island; Saint Helena, Ascension and Tristan da Cunha; Uzbekistan; and Vanuatu stayed the same. One government, South Sudan, dropped from Minimal to No Advancement in 2014, and four territories that were not assessed in 2013 were newly assessed in 2014. Of these four newly assessed governments, Christmas Island and Cocos (Keeling) Island received No Advancement assessments, and Niue and Tokelau received Minimal Advancement assessments.

1.2 REGIONAL ANALYSIS OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS AND COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

This 2014 report includes a regional analysis of country assessments and regional trends in government actions to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Figure 3 provides a regional breakdown of the country assessments. Latin America and the Caribbean had the most countries with a Significant Advancement assessment level (7), followed by Sub-Saharan Africa with 4 countries.

The remaining part of this discussion reviews trends and gaps in efforts to eliminate child labor, including the worst forms, by region.

1.2.1 Asia and the Pacific

2014 Regional Outlook

Asia and the Pacific

Meaningful Efforts

- Strengthened punishments for crimes involving the worst forms of child labor.
- Increased numbers of trained personnel responsible for the enforcement of labor and criminal laws.
- Increased funding for educational programs targeting rescued child laborers.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Weak legal frameworks for regulating the minimum age of employment and no minimum age for hazardous work in some countries and territories.
- Insufficient funding for labor and criminal law enforcement personnel.
- Significant barriers to education, particularly the lack of physical access and prohibitive costs to attend school.

In Asia and the Pacific, 77.8 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor, which equates to 9.3 percent of all children in the region.<sup>(8)</sup> Children in the Asia and Pacific region continue to engage in child labor, predominately in agriculture. In many of the region's coastal and island countries, children work in the fishing and seafood industries; while in Central and South Asia, many children work in cotton cultivation. Children in South Asia work as forced and bonded laborers in textiles and manufacturing. Throughout the Asia and Pacific region, children are employed as domestic workers in third-party households. Commercial sexual exploitation is also a concern, particularly in Kazakhstan, Maldives, Mongolia, Nepal, the Solomon Islands, Thailand, and Vanuatu.

In 2014, countries increased government capacity to combat the worst forms of child labor by hiring new personnel and conducting training for law enforcement officials. Both the Philippines and Thailand, for example, received an assessment of Significant Advancement for making a number of meaningful efforts in these areas to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

In 2014, several countries strengthened legal frameworks to protect children against child labor exploitation. Laws regulating children's work were strengthened as Afghanistan approved a list of 29 hazardous jobs and working conditions prohibited to children, Thailand raised the minimum age for agricultural work to 15 and for work on sea fishing vessels to 18, and Samoa passed legislation improving regulations of hazards in the workplace. Kazakhstan, Indonesia, and Papua New Guinea enacted legislation that strengthened punishments for crimes committed against children, including the worst forms of child labor. Legal frameworks against trafficking in persons were improved as Afghanistan acceded to the Palermo Protocol and the Solomon Islands enacted legislation that prohibits all forms of human trafficking and established specific penalties for the trafficking of children.

During the year, many countries in the Asia and Pacific region strengthened government capacity to enforce child labor laws. In Bangladesh, Timor-Leste, and Sri Lanka, additional labor inspectors were hired and received training; while in Nepal, the number of labor inspections increased. Law enforcement capacity to address crimes involving the worst forms of child labor was also strengthened in the region. Training programs to combat trafficking in persons were conducted in India, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, Kiribati, and Mongolia; while Cambodia and India drafted and implemented guidelines for the identification and referral to services of victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Governments in Maldives, Nepal, and the Philippines significantly increased the provision of welfare and protective services for children, including those involved in the worst forms of child labor.

Many countries in the region sought to increase children's access to education, including for child laborers and children at risk of labor exploitation. In 2014, Pakistan's Balochistan provincial government enacted legislation mandating free and compulsory education for children ages 5-16. Nepal began a pilot project for compulsory basic education, while Fiji approved a policy to provide 13 years of free, basic education. Governments in Bangladesh, India, Pakistan, Mongolia, and Nepal funded and implemented formal and non-formal educational programs for children rescued from the worst forms of child labor. Bhutan, Cambodia, Nepal, and Thailand also implemented social programs that aimed to increase access to education for children from marginalized groups who are most vulnerable to labor exploitation. Low-income families received financial assistance to cover educational expenses in Afghanistan, Cambodia, Fiji, Mongolia, Pakistan, and Timor-Leste, while the Indonesian government increased funding for schools that waive education fees for poor and vulnerable children. In addition, Fiji implemented a transportation assistance program to improve access to schools for children in the most remote areas of the country.

Despite these efforts, children in the Asia and Pacific region continue to engage in child labor, predominately in agriculture. In many of the region's coastal and island countries, children work in the fishing and seafood industries; while in Central and South Asia, many children work in cotton cultivation. Children in South Asia work as forced and bonded laborers in textiles and manufacturing. Throughout the Asia and Pacific region, children are employed as domestic workers in third-party households. Commercial sexual exploitation is also a concern, particularly in Kazakhstan, Maldives, Mongolia, Nepal, the Solomon Islands, Thailand, and Vanuatu.

There continue to be significant gaps in legal frameworks and law enforcement capacity to combat child labor in the Asia and Pacific region. India, Norfolk Island, Pakistan, and Tonga have not established a minimum age for work. India and Pakistan, as well as six Oceanic countries and territories, have not established a minimum age for hazardous labor. Fiji, Kiribati, Maldives, and Papua New Guinea have not prohibited hazardous occupations and activities for children. In 2014, the majority of the countries in the region did not have sufficient funding and personnel to enforce laws regulating child labor or prohibiting the worst forms of child labor. Kazakhstan, Kyrgyz Republic, Maldives, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu did not take any actions to enforce laws prohibiting child labor, including its worst forms; Bhutan and Pakistan provided no data on whether law enforcement actions were taken. During the reporting period, 10 countries did not have a national mechanism to coordinate government actions to combat child labor.

Many children in the Asia and Pacific region continue to face significant obstacles in accessing education. Eleven countries in the region have compulsory education ages that are below the minimal age for work, which may make children more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Prohibitive costs associated with education—such as books, uniforms, and teacher fees—prevent children from attending school in Bangladesh, Cambodia, Indonesia, Kiribati, Kyrgyz Republic, Nepal, Papua New Guinea, the Philippines, and the Solomon Islands. Physical access to education is a problem for children living in remote, rural areas, particularly in Bhutan, Cambodia, India, Kiribati, Nepal, the Philippines, and Thailand. Children from marginalized minority and migrant communities face barriers in accessing education in Cambodia, India, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyz Republic, and Thailand. Safety concerns due to physical distance, violent conflict, and harassment make it difficult for girls to attend school in Afghanistan, Nepal, Pakistan, Papua New Guinea, and Thailand.

1.2.2 Europe and Eurasia

2014 Regional Outlook

Europe and Eurasia

Meaningful Efforts

- Expanded efforts to train labor inspectors and criminal investigators on the enforcement of laws related to child labor.
- Expanded access to education and increased recognition of the link between education and the prevention and elimination of exploitive child labor.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Weak legal frameworks in countries that do not specify the types of hazardous work prohibited for children.
- Insufficient human and financial resources allocated to the enforcement of child labor laws.
- Unequal access to education for minorities and other disadvantaged children.

Regional statistics on child labor do not exist for Europe and Eurasia. However, some governments made efforts to increase the availability of information on the nature and prevalence of child labor at a national level. In 2014, governments throughout the region worked to improve legal and policy frameworks related to child labor, build the capacity of labor inspectors and law enforcement officials, and expand inclusive education.

During the year, several countries enhanced their legal frameworks to better protect children from involvement in child labor. Moldova adopted an improved list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children; Kosovo issued a decision to obligate personnel in the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry, and Rural Development to engage actively in the elimination of hazardous child labor in the agricultural sector; and Macedonia amended its Family Law to allow social workers to take steps to remove children from parents who are exploiting them as beggars. In an effort to improve service provision to victims of human trafficking, the Governments of Albania, Montenegro, and Armenia all enacted laws that increase victims' access to social services, such as health care and education. The Government of Georgia adopted new amendments to the country's existing anti-trafficking laws that aim to increase the number of successful prosecutions of human trafficking cases. In Ukraine, where recent conflict has resulted in more than 460,000 internally displaced persons, more than one third of whom are children, the Government passed a law instituting a system to register and provide benefits to displaced families.

Similarly, governments in the region launched policies to protect children from human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor. Albania, Azerbaijan, and Moldova each adopted new national action plans to combat trafficking in persons, while Bosnia and Herzegovina collaborated with USAID to improve implementation of its existing plan. Other governments launched policies to address the needs of at-risk populations of children who are particularly vulnerable to engagement in child labor. For instance, both Serbia and Montenegro adopted action plans that include the goal of reducing discrimination against Roma minorities and promoting their status in society.

Recognizing the need to strengthen implementation of existing laws, many governments in Europe and Eurasia prioritized capacity building for labor inspectors and law enforcement officials in 2014. In both Albania and Montenegro, labor inspectors received instructions on proactive techniques for identifying child victims of forced labor and human trafficking; while in Turkey, the Government ensured that new labor inspectors received on-the-job training on child labor laws and how to enforce them. The governments of Azerbaijan, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Russia, Serbia, and Turkey provided law enforcement officials, prosecutors, and judges with instructions on a variety of topics, including general training on the prevention and combating of human trafficking, best practices in the investigation and prosecution of trafficking-in-persons cases, and victim protection procedures.

Nearly all governments in the Europe and Eurasia region provide free and compulsory basic education for all children. In 2014, Moldova enacted a new Education Code, which increases the age for compulsory education from 16 to 18 years of age, thereby exceeding international standards. The Government also made a decision to ban children from working in agriculture during the school year. In Armenia, the Government took steps to ensure access to quality, inclusive education, especially for children with disabilities, by passing an amendment to the Law of the Republic of Armenia on Education. The Government of Kosovo issued a decision that directly recognizes the role of educational institutions in preventing and eliminating hazardous child labor by requiring schools to raise awareness about child labor issues and to actively identify and report potential cases of exploitative labor to the relevant authorities.

While countries in the region took important steps to address child labor issues, children in Europe and Eurasia continue to engage in child labor, predominantly in agriculture and street work, and in the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking.

There are a number of challenges that impede the enforcement of child labor laws in Europe and Eurasia. The number of labor inspectors in Kosovo, Montenegro, Russia, Turkey, and Ukraine is insufficient to provide adequate labor force coverage. Georgia has lacked a mechanism to enforce child labor laws since its labor inspectorate was abolished in 2006. Similarly, following the Government of Armenia's decision to amend its Labor Code and restructure its labor inspectorate in 2014, the country lacks a mechanism to monitor and enforce child labor laws. Bosnia and Herzegovina, Montenegro, and Serbia do not have laws that clearly and comprehensively define the types of hazardous work prohibited for children, which limits the capacity of labor inspectors to identify and remove children from exploitative labor situations. In Azerbaijan, children without written labor contracts are excluded from protection under the labor law, and similarly, in Turkey, children working in small agricultural enterprises, shops, and in domestic work lack legal protection.

Across the region, children at risk of statelessness or those who belong to ethnic minority groups, such as the Roma, continued to experience challenges in accessing education. Roma children lacking birth registration or identity documents in Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Kosovo, Macedonia, Montenegro, and Serbia were sometimes prevented from enrolling in schools. In Turkey, approximately 75 percent of school-aged Syrian refugees were not enrolled in schools, and in Russia, irregular migrants and asylum seekers were also sometimes denied access to education due to lack of documentation. Other common barriers to education in Europe and Eurasia include discrimination, language barriers, lack of support for children with disabilities, distance to schools, and prohibitive education-related costs. Children who do not attend school are particularly vulnerable to exploitation in the worst forms of child labor.

1.2.3 Latin America and the Caribbean

2014 Regional Outlook

Latin America and the Caribbean

Meaningful Efforts

- Expanded social and educational programs to improve school attendance for at-risk children.
- Strengthened legal protections against trafficking in persons.
- Implemented new institutional approaches for enforcing child labor laws.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Lack of publicly available statistics on labor and criminal law enforcement efforts.
- Lapses in mechanisms and efforts to coordinate government efforts against child labor.
- Continued vulnerability of indigenous, Afro-descendant, and migrant children to the worst forms of child labor.

In Latin America and the Caribbean, 12.5 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor, representing 8 percent of all children in the region.<sup>(8)</sup> In 2014, many countries in Latin America and the Caribbean continued to make concerted efforts to address child labor. Seventeen out of the 28 countries renewed their commitments to eliminate child labor by 2020 by signing a regional declaration that aims to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, social programs, and South-South exchanges. There were six countries in the region—Brazil, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Paraguay, and Peru—that received a rating of Significant Advancement for their efforts in 2014. These countries continued to build sound frameworks to address child labor by implementing cross-cutting improvements in legislation, coordination and enforcement efforts, policies, and programs. They responded in comprehensive ways to the need to rescue children from dangerous activities, while simultaneously building the skills of their future workforce. In this vein, many countries in 2014 strengthened programs that tackle child labor through education. Efforts across the region also included improved legal protections against the worst forms of child labor, as well as new institutional approaches to enforcing child labor laws.

In 2014, many governments expanded educational and social programs that aim to keep children in school and out of child labor. More than half of the Latin American and Caribbean countries covered in this report (16 out of 28) implemented cash transfer programs whose assistance was conditioned on families sending their children to school. Notable efforts include Brazil's Bolsa Familia program, whose operating budget increased 44 percent over the last 3 years. Eleven countries also implemented programs that extended the school day or provided alternative schedules for children at risk of child labor, including programs in Argentina and Nicaragua that tailored activities to the needs of families who work in agriculture.

In Central America, countries made the link between formal education and vocational training as a way to protect working youth from dangerous activities, including commercial sexual exploitation and drug trafficking. El Salvador, Guatemala, and Honduras signed the Alliance for Prosperity, a development plan that commits these governments to expand access to secondary education and provide job-training opportunities for youth, in part, to reduce migration, during which children become particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Governments also sought to increase educational opportunities for indigenous and Afro-descendant children; Bolivia, Chile, Honduras, and Paraguay all implemented educational or social programs that benefitted these populations.

Many governments expanded legal protections related to the worst forms of child labor. In 2014, Colombia, Ecuador, El Salvador, Grenada, Haiti, Nicaragua, and Peru passed legislation that increased penalties for human trafficking, expanded coverage of trafficking crimes, or regulated assistance to victims, including for children. In addition, the Dominican Republic amended its Penal Code to increase penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Argentina, Colombia, and Costa Rica ratified ILO C. 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers, which commits these governments to ensure that domestic workers have the same protections as other workers, as well as to prevent worker abuse and child labor. The Dominican Republic, Haiti, and Saint Lucia ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict, and Haiti also ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.

In 2014, many governments strengthened their capacity to enforce child labor laws. Ten governments increased their total number of labor inspectors, with Bolivia and Uruguay increasing their inspectors by 22 percent and 15 percent, respectively; a notable exception was El Salvador, where the number of inspectors decreased by 43 percent. Other governments created new institutional approaches to enforce labor laws. Brazil created mobile, child labor-specific inspection units to better coordinate efforts between regional Ministry of Labor officials and local inspectors, and Colombia created the Fundamental Labor Rights unit, a specialized inspection unit for child labor. In addition, Peru opened eight regional offices to better conduct inspections nationwide.

Despite substantive efforts made in the region, long-standing impediments hindered further progress toward the elimination of child labor, and children in Latin American and the Caribbean continue to engage in child labor, particularly in dangerous forms of agriculture and in domestic service. Many indigenous, Afro-descendant, and migrant children remain particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.<sup>(8, 23)</sup> Significant gaps remain, including comprehensive information on labor and criminal law enforcement efforts, and many countries have not enacted prohibitions on hazardous occupations and activities for children under age 18.

While some governments increased the amount of funding to agencies that enforce laws against child labor, 13 of the Latin American and Caribbean countries included in this report did not devote sufficient resources to such agencies. A larger problem in the region was a lack of public reporting on enforcement efforts. A significant majority of the countries (22 out of 28) did not make publicly available information on one or more labor or criminal enforcement metrics, including the number of inspectors or inspections conducted, the sectors or geographic localities in which inspections were carried out, or the sanctions or penalties imposed as a result of enforcement efforts.

Shortcomings in legal protections also remain. Research showed that 8 of the 28 countries have not prohibited occupations and activities considered hazardous for children: Argentina, Barbados, Belize, Grenada, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Trinidad and Tobago, and Venezuela. Four Caribbean countries also have not established a law that sets the minimum age for hazardous work at 18: Dominica, Grenada, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, and Trinidad and Tobago.

Although governments expanded educational and social programs that aim to keep children in school and out of child labor, access to education continues to be a challenge. In Haiti, despite legal provisions for free schooling, access to education is sometimes hindered by the application of fees and a lack of schools, although the National Free Education Program is working to address these issues. In other countries, such as Nicaragua, the costs associated with schooling (i.e., transport or school supplies) hinder children’s ability to attend school. In Honduras, access to education in urban areas is hindered by widespread violence and gangs’ attempts to recruit children while at school. The latter is also true in El Salvador, where reports indicate that gangs sometimes threaten children at school, although programs such as the School Prevention and Security Plan seek to address this. In Colombia, children’s access to education is hindered by internal armed conflict and displacement, as well as by the forced non-state recruitment of children into armed groups.

1.2.4 Middle East and North Africa

2014 Regional Outlook Middle East and North Africa
Meaningful Efforts <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Strengthened legal frameworks to address child labor.</li> <li>• Expanded social programs to improve access to education.</li> </ul>
Challenges and Existing Gaps <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Weak enforcement of child labor legal protections.</li> <li>• Lack of research or current data on child labor.</li> <li>• Limited access to education and high drop-out rates for children, including both refugee and citizen children.</li> </ul>

In the Middle East and North Africa, 9.2 million children are engaged in child labor, which is 8 percent of all children in the region.<sup>(8)</sup> The majority of the countries in the region made Moderate Advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Of the four countries that made Minimal Advancement, two have a limited child labor problem and two were significantly affected by large-scale conflict.

In 2014, armed conflict broke out or intensified in Iraq, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and Yemen. Non-state armed groups, including the Houthis in Yemen and the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), recruited children to serve as armed guards at checkpoints, suicide bombers, bomb makers, and human shields. Iraqi and Yemeni laws do not include penalties for the recruitment or use of children by armed groups. Some children in the Gaza Strip also received military training from Hamas.

The prolonged conflict in Syria continued to cause refugees to flee to neighboring countries. In Egypt, Iraq, Jordan, and Lebanon, despite government efforts, Syrian refugee children did not have sufficient access to education. Access to education was also limited for local children in Lebanon, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and Yemen, while the drop-out rates in Egypt, Jordan, Morocco, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and Yemen remained high. Barriers to education include an insufficient number of schools, the need for families to generate additional income through their children's labor, school-related costs, lack of security, and damage to schools or their use as shelters by internally displaced persons. These problems are further exacerbated in areas of conflict in Iraq, the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and Yemen. To increase access to education for refugee or local children, the governments of Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, and Tunisia launched or participated in programs to increase school attendance and reduce drop-out rates.

Despite a few important exceptions, the legal framework in the region mostly meets international child labor standards. Egypt and Tunisia adopted constitutions that codify children's rights. Oman enacted a law that raises the minimum compulsory education age and prohibits the use of children in illicit activities. Jordan enacted a law that increases protection for child laborers, while Algeria amended its Penal Code to fully prohibit child pornography.

Countries in the region also made some progress in establishing policies to address child labor. Prior to losing control over ministries due to armed conflict, Yemen announced a national action plan to prevent and end the recruitment of children into the Yemeni armed forces. Bahrain approved a National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking. Both Lebanon and Tunisia began implementing their respective anti-human trafficking national action plans, even though their formal adoption remained pending as of the end of 2014. Morocco established a mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor.

Despite adequate legal frameworks, governments in the region lack the capacity to enforce child labor laws. Algeria, Egypt, Iraq, and Yemen did not make child labor enforcement information publicly available. Lack of access to certain areas of the territory; inadequate training, funding, and resources for transportation; and an insufficient number of labor inspectors contributed to weak law enforcement efforts in Bahrain, Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon, Morocco, Tunisia, and the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. However, despite limited resources, Jordan was able to carry out an increased number of child labor inspections.

Another major obstacle in addressing child labor issues is the lack of up-to-date child labor data in Algeria, Bahrain, Morocco, Oman, Tunisia, and Western Sahara. In response to the lack of information, the Government of Iraq, in cooperation with UNICEF, conducted a study on child labor.

1.2.5 Sub-Saharan Africa

2014 Regional Outlook Sub-Saharan Africa

Meaningful Efforts

- Improved legal and policy frameworks.
- Increased availability of data on the worst forms of child labor.
- Improved coordination of government efforts.

Challenges and Existing Gaps

- Limited adoption of hazardous work lists across the region.
- Significant barriers to accessing education, including costs, lack of universal birth registration, and physical and sexual violence in schools.
- Limited or weak labor inspection systems.
- Limited social protection policies and programs.
- Continued recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.

Sub-Saharan Africa continues to be the region with the highest incidence of child labor.<sup>(8)</sup> An estimated 59 million children ages 5-17 are engaged in child labor, or more than one in five children in the region. Nearly 29 million of these child laborers are engaged in hazardous work.<sup>(8)</sup> During the reporting year, governments in Sub-Saharan Africa made notable efforts to improve legal and policy frameworks related to child labor, increase the availability of data on the worst forms of child labor, and improve coordination of government efforts to combat child labor. Among these, four countries—Côte d'Ivoire, Madagascar, South Africa, and Uganda—received an assessment of Significant Advancement for making several meaningful efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. For the first time, the Democratic Republic of the Congo received an assessment of Moderate Advancement for efforts to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers. However, children in the region continue to engage in dangerous forms of agriculture and domestic service. More needs to be done to prevent and eliminate child labor in Sub-Saharan Africa, including by reducing barriers to education, improving child labor legislation and enforcement, and implementing social protection policies and programs.

In 2014, Guinea, Liberia, and Sierra Leone suffered from a devastating Ebola virus disease outbreak, resulting in governments redirecting resources to address this health crisis. Furthermore, thousands of children became ill or lost parents during the outbreak and many schools were closed. In addition, terrorist activity and civil conflict caused disruption of education systems in the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Mali, Nigeria, Somalia, and South Sudan.

During the year, legal frameworks were strengthened in several countries. Angola, Eritrea, and Sierra Leone ratified the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons; Ethiopia, Ghana, and Guinea-Bissau ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict; and Somalia ratified ILO C. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor. In addition, Angola, Botswana, Burundi, Comoros, Madagascar, Seychelles, and Zimbabwe passed anti-trafficking-in-persons legislation; Chad criminalized the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict; and Guinea approved a new Labor Code with prohibitions against minors performing hazardous work.

To strengthen enforcement of child labor laws, Ethiopia, Sierra Leone, and Togo increased their number of labor inspectors; the Government of Benin updated its training curriculum for labor inspectors to include child labor. Seven governments—Burkina Faso, Chad, the Republic of the Congo, Gabon, Madagascar, Niger, and Senegal—made notable efforts to identify victims of child labor and referred the children to social service providers for care.

In 2014, the governments of Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Kenya, Mozambique, Niger, São Tomé and Príncipe, South Africa, Tanzania, and Uganda took the important step of conducting child labor research and releasing child labor data. Governments in Angola, Cameroon, Cabo Verde, Côte d'Ivoire, Madagascar, Namibia, Niger, and São Tomé and Príncipe established new national committees to coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms. In addition, Cameroon, Cabo Verde, Lesotho, and South Africa adopted national action plans to prevent and eliminate child labor.

Many countries in Sub-Saharan Africa are making progress in raising awareness of child labor. During the reporting period, 10 countries conducted public awareness campaigns on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking, and child soldiers. Regional child labor committees in Madagascar organized workshops to raise awareness of child labor in the production of vanilla and the Government of Côte d'Ivoire established a Joint Declaration of Commitment with the media to combat child labor.

Children who attend school are less vulnerable to child labor. In 2014, governments made important efforts to increase access to education. The governments of Djibouti, Guinea, and Sierra Leone adopted education sector strategic plans to ensure that children have access to quality education. The Government of the Republic of the Congo worked with the World Bank to launch a Safety Net Program to improve access to education for the poorest Congolese children; the Government of Mali made progress in providing access to education by re-opening 74 percent of schools for the 2013-2014 academic year; and the Government of the Central African Republic established Temporary Spaces for Learning and Child Protection in internally displaced persons sites to provide safe learning environments for children. In addition, eight governments (The Gambia, Kenya, Malawi, Senegal, Togo, Uganda, Zambia, and Zimbabwe) launched or expanded cash transfer programs to ensure that vulnerable children are able to attend school.

Despite the gains made in addressing child labor during the year, there is still an urgent need for governments to improve legal frameworks and enforcement of existing child labor laws. More than 25 percent of the countries in Sub-Saharan Africa still lack hazardous work lists, and in many countries, labor laws do not cover all of the sectors in which children work. In addition, of the 48 Sub-Saharan countries covered in the report, 11 (the Central African Republic, Comoros, The Gambia, Ghana, Guinea, Liberia, Mauritania, São Tomé and Príncipe, Somalia, South Sudan, and Zambia) have not yet ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict; 8 (Cameroon, Ghana, Kenya, Liberia, São Tomé and Príncipe, Somalia, South Sudan, and Zambia) have not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography; and 4 (Comoros, Somalia, South Sudan, and Uganda) have not ratified the Palermo Protocol.

In 2014, most countries' law enforcement bodies did not collect statistics on child labor and lacked resources and trained personnel, impeding efforts to identify and sanction child labor violations. Thirty-one countries had an insufficient number of labor inspectors and 14 countries had an insufficient number of criminal investigators responsible for enforcing the worst forms of child labor. In addition, 11 countries still lack coordinating mechanisms to manage government-wide efforts to combat child labor. Of the 36 countries with coordinating mechanisms, one third were inactive during the year.

More than 35 percent of the countries do not have national policies established to address child labor, and national social protection policies and programs exist in just over half of the countries in the region. Without social safety nets, vulnerable families may continue to rely on child labor to cope with the effects of poverty and economic shocks. In addition, although many countries in Sub-Saharan Africa have developed social programs to address the worst forms of child labor, none of them is sufficient to address this problem.

There has been some progress in improving school enrollment; however, more needs to be done in the region to remove barriers to basic education. For instance, 8 countries lack a compulsory education age and 11 countries have compulsory education ages below the minimum age for employment, leaving children particularly vulnerable to child labor as they are not required to be in school, but are not legally permitted to work either.

Although laws and policies establish free and compulsory education, the costs of uniforms and school supplies, as well as unofficial school fees, may impede some families from sending their children to school, rendering them more vulnerable to child labor. In addition, in many countries in Sub-Saharan Africa, children are not registered at birth and, therefore, do not have birth certificates. The lack of national policies and programs that provide free birth registration may be a barrier for children to access education and social services in countries where governments require birth certificates for enrollment and participation. Physical and sexual violence in schools, especially in West Africa, also prevents many children from attending school. Civil conflict in West and Central Africa has led to the use of children in armed conflict, with some children forcibly recruited or kidnapped from schools.

Eritrea and South Sudan received an assessment of No Advancement as a result of government complicity in forced child labor. The Government of Eritrea required children to participate in a national program called Maetot, under which some children in grades 9 through 11 engaged in agricultural, environmental, or hygiene-related public works projects for varying amounts of time during their annual summer holidays from school. In South Sudan, the Sudan People's Liberation

Army, the country's national army, recruited, sometimes forcibly, children to fight the opposition group.

Although many countries in Sub-Saharan Africa implemented some of the suggested actions for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor from last year's report, there is still much to be done. There is a pressing need for governments to increase their efforts to effectively protect children from exploitation by establishing national social protection policies and programs, ceasing the use of children in armed conflict, reducing barriers to education, and making improvements in child labor legislation and enforcement.

1.3 CONCLUSION: MOVING FORWARD IN ENSURING EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR ALL CHILDREN

This report provides several important lessons on how we should work together as a global community to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

1. Education and enforcement remain key areas of focus. A recurring theme throughout the report's analyses of 140 countries and territories is the critical need to provide children with an adequate education and enforce laws against child labor to keep children in the classroom and out of work. The country profiles also show how 13 governments made significant advancements this year in addressing the worst forms of child labor (Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, El Salvador, Madagascar, Paraguay, Peru, the Philippines, South Africa, Thailand, and Uganda) by taking significant and concrete actions, on a national level, to put the principles of their international child labor and education commitments into practice. More specifically, each of these 13 countries took two common actions: they developed or strengthened laws related to child labor or education, and they undertook meaningful efforts to enforce their laws.

In addition, each of the Significant Advancement countries went beyond strictly legal measures, and made other efforts to improve their child labor and education coordination mechanisms or to put new or better policies and programs in place to assist vulnerable children and their families, including taking the actions suggested by USDOL in previous reports. In contrast, the 44 countries assessed at Minimal Advancement were often lacking in effective legislation, enforcement, and coordination mechanisms to address the worst forms of child labor, or had reversed previous efforts; while the 11 countries assessed at the No Advancement level took no actions or efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor, or if they did so, were complicit in its use.

2. One size does not fit all. Although this report provides many examples of effective government efforts to address child labor around the world, research and experience indicate that there is no “one size fits all” approach for dealing with this complex issue. For this reason, each country profile in this year’s report contains its own set of “Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor,” based on the specific findings provided in the profile. It is our hope that governments can use these suggested actions as a roadmap to understand how to prevent or eliminate specific worst forms of child labor in their country. It is up to individual country governments to take ownership of their own efforts to combat child labor. This means exerting political will, developing robust reform strategies, coordinating with the global community to share best practices, and identifying institutional gaps where technical assistance may help build their capacity to combat exploitive child labor.

3. Elimination of child labor must be mainstreamed into broader development goals. Many countries in this report are integrating child labor into broader development policies and social protection programs. With the expiration this year of the Millennium Development Goals, most governments will be setting new development agendas through the Post-2015 Agenda process, which is expected to lead to the establishment of a set of Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) that will be in effect from 2015 to 2030. To best meet the needs of vulnerable children, including child laborers, the SDGs should focus on addressing the key factors that can contribute to children’s marginalization, such as poverty; inequalities within countries; a lack of access to quality educational opportunities; gender inequities and other cultural barriers; insufficient employment and decent work for youth and adults; hunger; poor health; inadequate or unsafe water resources; and the shocks caused by political, economic, health, and environmental crises.

Many of the themes emerging from this report are echoed in other recent research on child labor, which, in turn, offer their own insights to consider. Both UNESCO and UNICEF’s 2015 report entitled, Fixing the Broken Promise of Education for All: Findings from the Global Initiative on Out-of-School Children, and the ILO’s World Report on Child Labor 2015: Paving the Way to Decent Work for Young People offer recommendations for moving forward in ensuring that child laborers have opportunities.<sup>(22)</sup> Fixing the Broken Promise of Education for All suggests that in order for most countries to be successful in meeting the educational needs of all children, including the most marginalized, they must institute reforms on both a system-wide level (for example, changes to school infrastructure) and use a targeted approach (such as providing catch-up support for children with special needs), rather than a “one size fits all” approach. In addition, the report recommends that countries make efforts to ensure that their reforms in the education sector occur as part of efforts aimed at improving economic and social institutions to address poverty, unemployment, and other challenges.<sup>(20, 22)</sup>

The ILO, for its part, recommends that countries take action early to get children out of exploitive work and into school, particularly help youth move from school to decent work, end children’s involvement in hazardous labor (particularly for children ages 15-17), take into consideration the special situations of female children and youth with regard to child labor and decent work, address knowledge gaps related to child labor and youth employment, use a coherent and unified policy approach to child labor and decent work, and create an economic and legal environment that allows change to occur.(22)

To implement the recommendations outlined in this report and in those cited above, the countries covered in this report need to acknowledge, and be willing to confront, the inequalities of opportunity that cause children to become vulnerable and enter into, or stay in, exploitive labor. They should be willing to implement bolder, more comprehensive changes to level the playing field and ensure shared prosperity for all. They should also show a willingness to collaborate effectively with other governments, organizations, and individuals in carrying out change. As Malala Yousafzai said, “We have already taken many steps. Now it is time to take a leap.”(7)

Part 2 The U.S. Experience

Preventing the worst forms of child labor in the United States requires the ongoing effort and vigilance of the U.S. Department of Labor. USDOL is the sole Federal agency that monitors child labor and enforces child labor laws. The most sweeping Federal law that restricts the employment of child workers is the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), enforced by USDOL's Wage and Hour Division (WHD). In addition, the Occupational Safety and Health Act and related regulations, enforced by USDOL's Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA), apply to all employees regardless of age. WHD and OSHA have an active referral process in place for cases involving children under age 18, and the enforcement staffs of the respective agencies have worked collaboratively on a number of investigations.

The FLSA sets a minimum age of 14 for most employment in non-hazardous, non-agricultural industries, but it limits the times of day and the number of hours that 14- and 15-year-olds may work and the tasks that they may perform. The FLSA establishes a minimum age of 18 for non-agricultural occupations that the Secretary of Labor declares to be particularly hazardous or detrimental to children's health or well-being. There are currently 17 Hazardous Occupations Orders (HOs), which include a partial or total ban on work for children in the occupations or industries they cover. Despite these restrictions and limitations, in 2013, there were nine fatal occupational injuries among children ages 16-17, and five fatal occupational injuries among children below age 16 in the United States.<sup>(24)</sup>

WHD is committed to ensuring that the FLSA is strictly enforced. Every investigation carried out by WHD investigators includes looking for violations of the FLSA's child labor provisions. Complaints from the public about child labor, although not numerous, are given the highest priority within the agency. From October 1, 2013 to September 30, 2014, WHD concluded 591 cases where child labor violations were found. In 334 of these cases, violations of HOs were found, with 682 minors employed in violation of HOs.

Children are permitted under the FLSA to work at a younger age in agriculture than in other sectors. For example, the FLSA allows child farm workers ages 16-17 and all children working on farms owned or operated by their parents, regardless of their age, to perform farm work.

Non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and the ILO Committee of Experts have expressed concern about U.S. law on agricultural occupations permissible for children. In particular, a 2014 report from the NGO Human Rights Watch documents the exposure of children working in the U.S. tobacco industry to nicotine, toxic pesticides, and other dangers.<sup>(25)</sup>

Since 2009, WHD has investigated and concluded nearly 500 cases involving tobacco growers. In every one of the investigations, WHD looked for child labor violations; however, no violations were found. To maximize the likelihood of finding child labor violations, WHD investigations are generally conducted during the suckering and harvesting portion of the tobacco season, when children are more likely to be present.

WHD conducts extensive outreach and education to worker and employer organizations in agriculture. At a national level, WHD works with organizations such as Farm Worker Justice and the National Center for Farm Worker Health. At the State level, WHD works with a variety of stakeholders, including employee organizations, unions, and other governmental and NGOs to address child labor issues. In North Carolina, for example, WHD regularly communicates with employee organizations, such as the Farm Labor Organizing Committee, Telemond, and the Western North Carolina Worker Center, to hear concerns and train staff so that they can provide effective referrals to WHD. In addition, WHD works closely with the Mexican Consulate in Raleigh to reach farm workers.

Based on feedback from the stakeholder community, WHD has developed new materials in English and Spanish to help agricultural employers and workers better understand their responsibilities and rights. A new booklet for employers provides simple and comprehensive information on the laws and requirements governing agricultural employment, including wages, housing, transportation, and field sanitation.<sup>(26)</sup> WHD released a revised pocket card for agricultural workers that informs them of their rights and provides information on how to file a complaint with WHD if they believe that these rights have been violated.<sup>(27)</sup>

WHD has been working with the tobacco industry to improve compliance with labor laws and conditions for workers. This includes working with the Farm Labor Practices Group (FLPG), a tobacco industry stakeholder organization comprised of manufacturers, growers, and worker representatives, which has recognized the importance of maintaining compliance with child labor laws in the industry, and has taken steps to improve compliance levels industry-wide. In 2015, the FLPG plans to train more than 10,000 growers, farm labor contractors, workers, and others in the industry on U.S. labor laws prior to the growing season. Large manufacturers are now monitoring and requiring labor law compliance among their suppliers.

In 2014, WHD, working in collaboration with the FLPG, provided Philip Morris International WHD's agriculture-related compliance assistance and outreach materials. Philip Morris International distributed the outreach materials to all of their contracted tobacco growers in Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. In 2014, Philip Morris International also committed to buying U.S.-grown tobacco exclusively through third-party suppliers. As a result, Alliance One International and Universal Corporation, the world's largest tobacco leaf suppliers, must now enforce Philip Morris International's rigorous child labor policy on all U.S. farms from which they purchase tobacco, including implementing a prohibition on children's participation in many tasks associated with tobacco farming.<sup>(28)</sup>

In addition to WHD's outreach efforts in the agricultural sector, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) produces and disseminates Are You a Teen Worker? to educate children and young workers about their rights and other resources on child and young worker safety and health for a variety of audiences.<sup>(29, 30)</sup> For example, NIOSH, in partnership with the National Children's Center for Rural and Agricultural Health and Safety, developed the North American Guidelines for Children's Agricultural Tasks (NAGCAT). NAGCAT provides information on children's physical, mental, and psychosocial abilities in relation to the requirements of specific types of farm work and has been effective in reducing child agricultural injuries.<sup>(31)</sup> In addition, the U.S. Department of Education's Migrant Education Program works to ensure that migrant children who move from one State to another are not penalized by disparities among States in curriculum, graduation requirements, State academic content, or student academic achievement standards. The program provides services to migrant children, such as remedial and compensatory instruction, bilingual and multicultural instruction, vocational instruction, career education services, counseling, testing, health services, and preschool care.<sup>(32)</sup>

Beyond agriculture, WHD's YouthRules! website is a child labor information portal that targets all teenaged workers with enhanced navigation, multimedia content, social media linkages, and a Young Worker Toolkit of teen-friendly resources.<sup>(33)</sup> The site has been reorganized to make useful information easier to find (for example, the hours that teens can work and the jobs they can hold). The site maintains links to compliance assistance materials for employers, parents, and educators. It also has links to important worker resources, including information on filing legal complaints, Federal and State child labor laws, Federal and State labor offices, and links to other USDOL and government-wide sites with information for children and young workers. A WHD toll-free helpline is also available (1-866-4US-WAGE or 1-866-487-9243) to provide information about child labor laws.

Part 3 Report Guide

3.1 RESEARCH FOCUS

3.1.1 Country Coverage

This report covers 123 independent countries and 17 non-independent countries and territories designated as GSP beneficiaries and/or beneficiaries of trade preferences under the AGOA, CBTPA, and ATPA/ATPDEA. This includes former GSP recipients who have negotiated free-trade agreements with the United States.<sup>(34)</sup> Because the population of children is extremely small (less than 50) or non-existent in the British Indian Ocean Territory, Heard Island and McDonald Islands, and the Pitcairn Islands, the report does not contain a discussion of these non-independent countries and territories. Rather, the report presents information on child labor and the worst forms of child labor and efforts to eliminate this exploitation in the remaining 123 countries and 14 non-independent countries and territories. The regional breakdown of these countries and non-independent countries and territories covered in this report is as follows: Sub-Saharan Africa: 48, Asia and the Pacific: 34, Europe and Eurasia: 19, Latin America and the Caribbean: 28, and the Middle East and North Africa: 11. Because the report focuses on government efforts, non-independent countries and territories are classified by the region of the country with which each non-independent country and territory is associated, as appropriate. Hereinafter, the use of “countries” in the report will also include territories.

3.1.2 Population Covered

In undertaking research on the “worst forms of child labor,” ILAB relied on the definition of a child provided in the TDA, which is the same definition contained in ILO C. 182. The TDA and ILO C. 182 define a “child” to be a person under the age of 18.

3.1.3 Reporting Period

The reporting period for this year’s report is January 2014 through December 2014.

3.1.4 Type of Employment

This report focuses on the worst forms of child labor. The definition of the “worst forms of child labor” is found in the TDA and is the same as that included in ILO C. 182. It includes (a) all forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale or trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, or forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict; (b) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes; (c) the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs; and (d) work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.<sup>(35)</sup> Similar to ILO C. 182, the TDA states that the work described in subparagraph (d) should be “determined by the laws, regulations, or competent authority of the country involved.”<sup>(35)</sup>

Hazardous Work

The work covered by subparagraph (d) is commonly referred to as “hazardous work.” As noted above, individual governments determine the work activities and processes considered “hazardous” for children. ILO C. 182 requires governments to identify these activities after consultation with workers’ and employers’ organizations, taking into consideration international standards, in particular the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation (ILO R. 190).<sup>(36)</sup>

Finally, the ILO includes children's work on farms owned or operated by their families when considering the application of ILO C. 182 and ILO C. 138.(37-39) Accordingly, this report reflects the ILO's broad vision on this issue and does not distinguish its analysis by the size or nature of farms in discussions of the worst forms of child labor in agriculture.(40)

3.2 RESEARCH METHODS

3.2.1 Data Collection and Sources

Information was gathered for this report through desk research, U.S. embassy reporting, and limited field work. Information was also received from some foreign governments. Desk research consisted of an extensive review of mostly online materials, which included both primary and secondary sources. The sources included academic and independent researchers, media outlets, NGOs, international organizations, foreign governments, and U.S. Government agencies. Information was also collected from U.S. Government-funded technical assistance and field research projects.

Examples of sources used in this report are the latest editions available of country laws relevant to child labor, national-level child labor surveys, NGO reports on the nature of child labor in various countries, and UN reports, including direct requests and observations by the ILO Committee of Experts.(41)

USDOS and U.S. embassies and consulates abroad provided important information by gathering data from contacts, conducting site visits, and reviewing local media sources. A request for information from the public was published in the Federal Register, and a copy of the request was mailed to the Washington, DC-based foreign embassies of the countries covered in this report.(42) Data were also gathered through site visits to certain countries covered in this report, which included the collection of additional documents, as well as key informant interviews.

3.2.2 Analysis of Information

The existence of child labor, particularly in its worst forms, often involves violations of laws and regulations, including serious criminal violations in some egregious cases. Information on child labor may be intentionally suppressed. The victims of the worst forms of child labor may be too vulnerable or politically underrepresented or marginalized to claim their rights or even communicate their situations. These factors make information on the worst forms of child labor often difficult to obtain. Therefore, in order to compile a credible and comprehensive report, ILAB used the following criteria to assess information:

1. Nature of the information. Whether the information about child labor and government efforts to combat it gathered from research, public submissions, or other sources is relevant and probative, and covers the “worst forms of child labor” and “government efforts” as used in this report. (See the Glossary for definitions.) Specific evidence of government efforts was preferred where it was available.
2. Date of the information. Whether the source information about child labor is no more than 5 years old. More current information was given priority, and ILAB used sources published during the reporting period to the extent possible. Information older than 5 years was generally not considered.

However, in the case of child labor statistics, certain factors contribute to less frequent generation of new data. Because government and other efforts to address exploitative child labor take time to have an impact on national-level rates of child labor, children's involvement in such activities does not change dramatically from year to year. Child labor surveys are carried out infrequently, in part, because the child labor picture does not change frequently (although there have been recent increases in the number of surveys carried out). In order to present an overall picture of children's work in as many countries as possible, ILAB used statistics in some cases that are more than 10 years old as of the writing of this report (from 2004). For more information on the statistics used in this report, see the “Child Labor and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions” section.

In addition, in cases in which previous editions of this report have asserted that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods, and in the absence of evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated, sources older than 5 years may be used. This practice makes the report's information on such forms of child labor consistent with USDOL's List of Goods Produced by Child Labor or Forced Labor as mandated by the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005 (TVPRA). Statements that the worst forms of child labor exist in the production of goods will be removed when there is evidence that the problem has been effectively eliminated.

3. Source of the information. Whether the information, either from primary or secondary sources, is from a source whose methodology, prior publications, degree of familiarity and experience with international labor standards, and/or reputation for accuracy and objectivity warrants a determination that it is relevant and probative.

4. Extent of the corroboration. Whether the information about the use of child labor is corroborated by other sources.

3.2.3 Limitations

While data on the worst forms of child labor and information about government efforts to provide remediation are improving, data are still insufficient to provide a complete understanding of the problem. A lack of information may create the impression that a country has less serious problems with the worst forms of child labor than it has in reality. At the same time, this dearth of information may create the impression that a government is doing less than it should, when, in fact, efforts to combat the worst forms exist, but are simply unreported or unpublicized. Although countries with open and available information may sometimes appear to have larger problems relative to other countries, this may not be the case. In fact, countries that make information collection on child labor a priority are in a better position to eliminate the problem than those countries where such information is suppressed, because they can target their policies and programs at identified problem areas in order to achieve maximum impact.

Although information was requested from the public, including governments covered in the report, only 19 governments out of the 140 countries submitted information in response to the request.<sup>(42)</sup> In addition, lack of in-country data collection in the majority of the countries and lack of access to other in-country sources of information may have also impacted the reporting.

Due to the inability to travel to each country covered in the report, ILAB relies on U.S. embassies and Internet research to gather primary and secondary sources of information. For countries where Internet access and technology is limited, there may be less information available online. Countries with more closed government processes and less civil society participation may also have less information readily available. When ILAB was unable to find information about the major topics of discussion, including the content of important laws or enforcement efforts, this was noted.

Most of ILAB's online research was conducted in English; however, some research was conducted in Spanish, French, and to a limited extent, Portuguese. Materials written in other languages were generally not reviewed.

Despite ILAB's best efforts to cover relevant topics as comprehensively as possible, the report cannot cover every salient issue that may affect children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor. For example, there are many factors that impact whether a household will send its child to school, to work, or to both. A lack of available information, however, limits the discussion of these issues for some countries. In these cases, we note that the profile's discussion is incomplete. Furthermore, ILAB chose to limit its discussion of education to the issue of access because research on the relationship between child labor and the quality of education is lacking.

This report excludes infrastructure projects, health programs, and related policies and programs that support children's school attendance because it is more difficult to assess their direct impact on child labor.<sup>(43, 44)</sup> This report also does not examine the impact that corruption may have on children’s involvement in the worst forms of child labor, particularly as it relates to enforcement of laws covering the worst forms of child labor.

3.3 ORGANIZATION AND CONTENT OF COUNTRY PROFILES

ILAB organized country profiles to track the types of efforts outlined in the TDA Conference Committee report. In this report, the Conference Committee indicated that the President should consider certain criteria when determining whether a country has met its obligation under the GSP program to implement its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.<sup>(45)</sup> Each country profile contains information regarding these criteria: an introductory paragraph that provides an assessment of government actions to advance efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, six sections that describe the problem and different aspects of government efforts to address it, and a set of suggested actions.

In 2013, ILAB introduced a new format for country profiles to make this report a more user-friendly document and a better policy tool for engagement. The format displays key information in a more streamlined manner, using more tables and less text than in previous years. There are two main changes. First, information considered “static” or relatively unchanged from year to year (e.g., sectors in which children work, laws, enforcement agencies) is condensed into tables in each section, along with any updates on developments during the reporting period. Second, findings about gaps in government efforts are elaborated in a narrative following the table.

The content and format of the six sections comprising a country profile is described in detail below.

3.3.1 Country Overview

Each country profile begins with an overview for 2014 in a single paragraph, beginning with a statement identifying the assessment level assigned to the country for 2014. Countries are assessed as having made Significant, Moderate, Minimal, or No Advancement. In a limited number of cases, assessments are not provided because the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (under 50) or there is no evidence of the worst forms of child labor and the countries appear to have an adequate preventive legal and enforcement framework. See section 1.6.5 for a more detailed discussion on the criteria used to determine a country’s assessment.

Following the statement of assessment, the paragraph offers a summary of key findings in the country profile. The narrative includes any meaningful efforts taken by a government, defined as efforts in key areas in which the government advanced in implementing its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.<sup>(35, 45)</sup> The narrative also notes the most common or egregious forms of child labor found in the country and highlights areas in which key gaps in government efforts remain.

3.3.2 Section 1: Prevalence and Sectoral Distribution of Child Labor

3.3.2.1 Content Overview

The first section of each country profile attempts to provide, to the extent that information is available, a comprehensive picture of the worst forms of child labor in the country. This section begins with a review of available data on working children and school attendance, followed by a presentation of the most common sectors and activities in which children are engaged. It provides information about the nature and conditions of the work when such information is available.

3.3.2.2 Format

Table 1, Statistics on Children’s Work and Education, contains at least four variables: percentage of working children, school attendance rate, percentage of children combining work and school, and primary completion rate. The majority of the country profiles have data for at least one of these variables. A smaller set of profiles contain data on children’s work by sector. The age and methodologies of the original surveys that provide the underlying data vary, and in some cases, the surveys may not reflect the true magnitude of the child labor problem in a country. For some countries, data are unavailable from the sources used in this report. For more information on Table 1, including background on the institutions involved in data collection and analysis, see the section “Children’s Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions.”

Table 2, Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity, groups types of children’s work by sector, using categories established by the ILO and UCW for national child labor surveys (Agriculture, Industry, and Services), as well as a category intended to capture work understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a) – (c) of ILO C. 182 (referred to by the report as “Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor”).<sup>1</sup> Sectors and specific activities performed by children are sorted into these categories according to internationally accepted industry and occupational codes.<sup>(46)</sup>

Table 2 is footnoted to (1) identify sectors or activities for which information is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown, (2) identify sectors or activities determined to be hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182, and (3) provide the definition of “Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor” as previously described.

Following Table 2, the section may highlight additional sector-specific information in a brief narrative, such as geographic regions where child labor occurs or details on the nature of the work performed. In addition, the narrative may discuss any social, economic, or political issues that impact the prevalence of child labor, such as barriers to accessing education, or major socioeconomic shocks to the country that may inhibit the government’s ability to address child labor, such as a natural disaster or armed conflict.

3.3.3 Section 2: Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor

3.3.3.1 Content Overview

The second section of each profile provides information on two criteria established in the TDA Conference Committee report: “1) whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor,” and “2) whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures.”<sup>(45)</sup> Accordingly, this section describes a country’s legal framework with regard to the worst forms of child labor and assesses the adequacy of that legal framework by comparing it, in general, to the standards called for in the TDA. Because the TDA uses the definition of the worst forms of child labor contained in ILO C. 182, this section focuses on comparing the country’s legal framework to the standards embodied in that Convention. In line with the ILO Committee of Experts, ILAB considered any law that could be used to prohibit the worst forms of child labor. ILAB also considered whether the country had ratified key international instruments related to child labor, including its worst forms.

In this section, ILAB observed whether laws were comprehensive in their prohibitions of all variations of a particular worst form. For example, with regard to commercial sexual exploitation, the report assesses whether countries prohibit recruitment, use, sale of, and benefiting from the proceeds of child prostitution.

It is important to note that ILAB focuses on legal protections against the worst forms of child labor regardless of whether a problem exists in a country. This is to ensure that legal frameworks also serve as preventive mechanisms. For example, even if a country does not have a problem with the use of children in illicit activities, if there are no laws that exist to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, the report points out a gap when comparing laws on this issue against international standards.

With these general parameters in mind, most reports contain some combination of the following assessments. With regard to forced child labor, ILAB assessed whether a country's laws comprehensively prohibit all manifestations of the problem of forced child labor, debt bondage, and/or child slavery. With regard to child trafficking, ILAB judged the adequacy of existing legal protections against international and domestic trafficking. In all cases in which countries maintain a military force, ILAB assessed whether the minimum age for compulsory military recruitment is 18. In countries where there is an ongoing armed conflict, ILAB also examined whether the law prohibits forced or voluntary recruitment of children by the armed forces, as well as other armed groups.

On the issue of commercial sexual exploitation of children, ILAB assessed both whether a country's laws prohibit the recruitment, use, sale of, and benefiting from the proceeds of child prostitution; and whether laws prohibit the production, distribution/sale of, benefiting from, and possession of child pornography. Regarding illicit activities, ILAB assessed whether the law prohibits the use, procuring, or offering of a child in these activities, such as forced begging and the production and trafficking of drugs.

Using ILO R. 190 as a guide for the interpretation of Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182, ILAB also identified the types of hazardous work that children perform or are at risk of engaging in for each country. ILAB then applied international standards to the country's legal framework to determine whether adequate protections exist.

Because the standards on the minimum age for work in ILO C. 138 provide a foundation for protections against the worst forms of child labor, ILAB used the standards embodied in that convention to assess each country's minimum age for admission to work and the age up to which education is compulsory.<sup>(47)</sup> ILO C. 138 establishes that countries should set a minimum age for work of 15, or 14 for countries with less-developed economies. According to ILO C. 138, the minimum age for work shall not be less than the age for compulsory education. ILAB recognizes that the Convention calls upon member states to avoid the establishment of a minimum age for work lower than the compulsory school age. However, the opposite situation—in which the minimum age for compulsory schooling is lower than the minimum age for work—should also be avoided. It is possible that a low (or no) compulsory school age may encourage children below the legal age of employment to work because they are not required to attend school. Because such work is illegal, it may be more hidden from public view than other forms of work, thus increasing the possibility of exploitation through involvement in hazardous work or other worst forms of child labor. Therefore, the section notes when a country's minimum age for compulsory education falls below the minimum age for employment. It also notes when free education or compulsory education laws are not adequately implemented.

3.3.3.2. Format

The section begins with Table 3, Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor. The conventions listed include ILO C. 138 and 182 and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols on the involvement of children in armed conflict and on the sale of children, child prostitution, and child pornography, and the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the UN Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime (the Palermo Protocol). A checkmark indicates the country's ratification, acceptance, accession, or succession to the instrument, given that these actions have the same practical legal effect regarding the substantive obligations of the instruments as ratification.<sup>(48)</sup> If other relevant international instruments (beyond those listed in Table 3) were ratified during the reporting period, this may be recognized in a short narrative following the table.

Table 4, Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor, lists a set of standards that should be established through national legislation in order to fully implement ILO C. 182. These include the minimum ages for work and hazardous work; hazardous occupations and activities prohibited to children; prohibitions of forced labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and using children in illicit activities; the minimum ages for voluntary and compulsory military service; and the compulsory education age. Table 4 also notes whether the government has a law on free basic education.

Table 4 is followed by a narrative describing any relevant laws the government enacted, or advanced to a significant step in the legislative process, during the reporting period. If the government failed to take action on an existing draft bill that would fill a gap in the legal framework related to child labor, this also may be noted. The narrative then assesses whether existing laws meet international standards and are sufficiently comprehensive to cover the child labor issues that are present in the country.

3.3.4 Section 3: Enforcement of Laws on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

3.3.4.1 Content Overview

The third section of each profile describes the roles of government agencies in enforcing laws relevant to child labor, including its worst forms, and reports on enforcement efforts made during the reporting period. It addresses the third indicator for assessing a country's child labor efforts included in the TDA Conference Committee report: "3) whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints relating to allegations of the worst forms of child labor."<sup>(35)</sup> ILAB identified two distinct concepts from the criteria to assess country efforts and, this year, evaluated them separately in sections 3 and 4.

In this section, ILAB analyzed whether or to what degree the country had defined enforcement agency roles and had investigated and addressed complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor. Because ILO C. 182 discusses enforcement to a limited extent, other international standards and practices were also considered as general evaluating guidelines, including those from ILO Conventions 81 and 129 on Labour Inspection and Labour Inspection in Agriculture, respectively. To the extent possible, ILAB assessed whether the country had:

- Established labor inspection systems;
- Employed a sufficient number of inspectors to enforce the country's child labor laws and regulations;
- Provided sufficient funding and resources to enforce child labor laws and regulations;
- Provided sufficient training to inspectors, including specialized training on child labor;
- Established processes for coordination and sharing of information on child labor among enforcement authorities;
- Created and implemented an effective mechanism for filing and responding expeditiously to complaints about child labor;
- Developed and implemented an adequate labor inspection strategy that allowed for different types of on-site inspections of worksites (for example, routine, targeted, complaint-driven, and unannounced inspections), and conducted inspections with sufficient frequency and in all relevant sectors;

- Provided sufficient authority to the labor inspectorate to sanction child labor violations and follow through with sanctions where appropriate; and
- Published information on specific inspection results and fines or sanctions imposed for violation of child labor laws and regulations.

In most cases, ILAB did not have enough information to determine whether numbers of inspectors were sufficient in the country. Given the lack of information, ILAB was cautious in its assessment of the adequate number of inspectors. Only in certain situations did ILAB make findings of insufficiency, for example: when the number was small relative to the population; the government acknowledged their own resource constraints; key international organizations concluded that resource gaps exist; or several sources corroborated such a conclusion. In those instances where the number of labor inspectors is small relative to the population, ILAB considered the ILO's benchmarks that the number of labor inspectors in relation to workers should approach 1:10,000 in industrial market economies, 1:15,000 in industrializing economies, 1:20,000 in transition economies, and 1:40,000 in less developed countries in determining whether a finding should be made.<sup>(49)</sup>

Although ILO Conventions focus primarily on labor laws, the worst forms of child labor encompass activities, such as commercial sexual exploitation, that are generally covered by criminal laws. Therefore, the report also assessed the same criteria with regard to criminal law enforcement.

3.3.4.2 Format

Section 3 begins with a broad statement about whether the government has established institutional mechanisms to enforce laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms. It then presents a table listing the agencies charged with enforcing such laws and identifies each agency's role. A narrative follows, with subsections on the two relevant types of enforcement efforts (labor law enforcement and criminal law enforcement). As available, details may be provided on the number of inspectors or investigators; funding and training levels; capacity; and the number, type, and quality of inspections or investigations during the reporting period. The narrative includes findings where ILAB has concluded that a shortfall exists between international standards and government efforts.

3.3.5 Section 4: Coordination of Government Efforts on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

3.3.5.1 Content Overview

Section 4 provides information on institutions charged with coordinating overall efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms, in the country. ILAB derived this concept from the Conference Committee report's third criteria that references whether the country has "formal institutional mechanisms."

Although the Conference Committee report speaks only to whether such mechanisms are in place with regard to investigation and complaints of the worst forms of child labor, ILO C. 182, Article 5, states that "[e]ach Member shall, after consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, establish or designate appropriate mechanisms to monitor the implementation of the provisions giving effect to this Convention." ILAB applied this concept of monitoring to all provisions of the Convention, not just those directly related to enforcement of child labor laws. However, since the term "monitor" is often associated exclusively with enforcement activities, ILAB uses the term "coordinate" to describe this function.

3.3.5.2 Format

Section 4 is typically brief, beginning with a short statement as to whether the government has any coordinating mechanism focused on or related to combatting child labor, followed by a table listing the relevant coordinating bodies, their composition (if known), and their respective mandates. A subsequent narrative details the activities of the coordinating bod(ies) during the reporting period, if known, and may include findings on gaps in their efforts.

3.3.6. Section 5: Government Policies on the Worst Forms of Child Labor

3.3.6.1 Content Overview

The fifth section of the profiles provides information on the fourth TDA Conference Committee report criterion: “whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.”<sup>(45)</sup> This section describes a country’s policies and plans to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

ILAB used the framework provided in ILO R. 190, Article 15(f), which illustrates measures that countries might take to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as “encouraging the development of policies by undertakings to promote the aims of the Convention.”<sup>(36)</sup> In ILO C. 182 and in comments from the ILO Committee of Experts, the terms “programs” and “plans of action” are often used interchangeably. Indeed, it is difficult to distinguish, in some cases, among a policy, a plan, and a program. For purposes of the TDA, a policy on child labor is defined as a framework that lays out general principles that are intended to guide a government’s actions on child labor. Although policies may call for the passage of new laws and the establishment of new programs, for the purposes of the TDA, whether laws are adopted or programs are implemented is discussed in the “Legal Framework for the Worst Forms of Child Labor” section or the “Social Programs to Address Child Labor” section, respectively.

Specifically, ILAB assessed whether governments had done the following:

- Established specific child labor policies, any related development policies that explicitly incorporate the issue of child labor, or any related development policies that do not explicitly target child labor but that could have an impact on the problem. (ILAB determined that because so few governments distinguish between worst forms of child labor and child labor, in general, when establishing policies, any policy on child labor, whether targeted to worst forms of child labor or not, would be discussed.)

- Ensured that these policies included specific action plans, assigned responsibilities, established goals, and set timetables.
- Implemented its established policies and plans.

3.3.6.2 Format

Section 5 begins with a statement indicating whether the government has established any policies related to child labor, including its worst forms. This is followed by a table listing the relevant policies, providing a description of each policy’s objective and any developments in implementation that occurred during the reporting period. The table is footnoted to identify policies that were approved during the reporting period, as well as broader development or education policies that may have an impact on reducing or eliminating child labor but have not been evaluated to determine whether this is indeed the case. The narrative following the table is reserved for any findings as to whether existing policies sufficiently address child labor issues, including its worst forms, present in the country.

3.3.7 Section 6: Social Programs to Address Child Labor

3.3.7.1 Content Overview

This section responds to the Conference Committee report criterion that calls for a consideration of “whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.”<sup>(45)</sup> This section discusses only those programs launched or implemented during the reporting period.

As in the section on policies, this section describes both programs focused on the worst forms of child labor and those focused on all forms of child labor, because countries often do not distinguish between the two in child labor programs. Also, as in the policies section, this section discusses programs that focus on child labor specifically, as well as programs that address poverty, education, and other related matters that could have a beneficial impact on child labor.

ILAB generally considered the implementation of projects through international organizations to be government efforts because the projects can only be carried out with the consent of the government and such efforts are sometimes considered part of national budgets.

ILAB applied standards embodied in Articles 6 and 7 of ILO C. 182 to assess country programs to combat child labor. ILO R. 190 was also used in determining the kinds of efforts that governments might make, such as giving special attention to girls, providing training to employers and workers, and raising awareness. With this in mind, ILAB assessed whether governments had:

- Participated in any social programs to combat child labor, including programs aimed at directly preventing and withdrawing children from child labor;
- Implemented social programs with sufficient resources to combat the scope and magnitude of the child labor problem at issue;
- Targeted at-risk populations; and
- Implemented social programs successfully and sustainably.

3.3.7.2 Format

Section 6 opens with a statement as to whether the government funded and/or participated in social programs that include the goal of eliminating or reducing child labor, including its worst forms. As with the policy section, this section lists relevant programs, including larger development programs such as poverty reduction strategies or education-focused initiatives that may have an impact on child labor (these are footnoted to clarify when the impact on child labor has not been studied). Footnotes also identify projects that are funded by the government and/or were launched during the reporting period. The table provides a description of each social program and its activities and accomplishments, to the extent known, during the reporting period. A narrative may follow with analysis of the extent to which these efforts were sufficient to address the scope of the problem and/or covered the key sectors in which children are known to work in the country.

3.3.8 Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor

The last section of each country profile is a set of suggested actions. These suggested actions serve as a roadmap of efforts that individual countries can follow to more fully address the worst forms of child labor. The year in which a suggested action was first provided is listed in the table followed by every year the action was included in the report and not addressed.

3.4 FRAMEWORK FOR COUNTRY ASSESSMENTS

3.4.1 Objective for Country Assessments

As discussed in section 1.5.1, ILAB is using an assessment tool to clearly indicate and highlight the status of efforts by each country benefiting from U.S. trade preferences to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.

3.4.2 Research Question Guiding Country Assessments

The research question that ILAB is asking in its assessment of an individual beneficiary country is: “To what extent did the beneficiary country advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period?”

3.4.3 Scope of Country Assessment

As discussed, the TDA Conference Committee report outlines the following six criteria that the President is asked to consider in determining whether a country is implementing its international commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor:

1. Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations proscribing the worst forms of child labor;
2. Whether the country has adequate laws and regulations for the implementation and enforcement of such measures;
3. Whether the country has established formal institutional mechanisms to investigate and address complaints related to allegations of the worst forms of child labor;
4. Whether the country has a comprehensive policy for the elimination of the worst forms of child labor;
5. Whether social programs exist in the country to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labor, and assist in the removal of children engaged in the worst forms of child labor; and
6. Whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.<sup>(45)</sup>

The country assessment tool is intended to inform the sixth criterion listed above: “whether the country is making continual progress toward eliminating the worst forms of child labor.” In preparing the assessments,

ILAB evaluated the first five criteria listed above, grouping them into the same five areas addressed in the individual country profiles: laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. The assessment is based on an analysis of the status of each country’s efforts in these five areas considered as a whole and compared to similar past efforts. Importantly, the assessment is not intended to reflect a determination of “whether a country has implemented its commitments to eliminate the worst forms of child labor.”<sup>(45)</sup> That determination is reserved for the President.

3.4.4 Method for Determining a Country Assessment

Each country profile presented in this report identifies a set of suggested actions for governments to take in order to advance efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The implementation—or lack of implementation—of these suggested actions establishes a baseline, or point of reference, from which to assess a country’s advancement. These actions, in combination with other efforts undertaken by a country, were considered when assessing the level of a country’s advancement during the current reporting period compared with the previous reporting period.

Once a country’s efforts were identified, ILAB assessed (1) the significance of efforts—actions that could have an impact in eliminating the worst forms of child labor—undertaken during the reporting period, and (2) the extent to which these efforts addressed the first five TDA criteria, outlined above, in a limited or meaningful manner during the reporting period. In addition, ILAB reviewed whether a government at the national, regional, or local level was complicit in the use of forced child labor, including the forcible recruitment of children for armed conflict.

To promote consistency and transparency, and to operationalize those first five TDA criteria, each country’s efforts were analyzed according to a uniform set of guidance questions related to the five general areas of laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs. These guidance questions are presented in Appendix II.

3.4.5 Country Assessment Categories

Each country received one of five possible assessments: Significant Advancement, Moderate Advancement, Minimal Advancement, No Advancement, or No Assessment.

1. Significant Advancement. Compared with the suggested actions reported in 2013, a country significantly advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor if it took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in all relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.
2. Moderate Advancement. Compared with the suggested actions reported in 2013, a country moderately advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor if it took suggested actions or made other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in some relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.
3. Minimal Advancement. There are two types of countries that could receive this assessment. The first type of country is one that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2013, minimally advanced efforts in eliminating the worst forms of child labor by taking suggested actions or making other meaningful efforts during the reporting period in a few relevant areas covering laws and regulations, enforcement, coordination, policies, and social programs.

The second type of country is one that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2013, made some advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor, but also established a new law, regulation, or policy; upheld an existing law, regulation, or policy; or initiated or continued a practice during the reporting period that reverses or delays advancement in eliminating the worst forms of child labor.

4. No Advancement. There are two types of countries that could receive this assessment. The first type of country is one that, compared with the suggested actions reported in 2013, took no suggested actions and made no other meaningful efforts to advance the elimination of the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period. This would include countries in which there is no evidence of a worst form of child labor problem and where the country has gaps in its legal and enforcement framework on child labor.

The second type of country is one that in more than an isolated incident was complicit in the use of forced child labor. Given the egregious nature of this form of exploitation, countries complicit in the use of forced child labor were considered to have made No Advancement regardless of efforts in other areas. It is important to note that complicity can occur when a government is involved in forced child labor at any level of government, including at the local, regional, or national level.

The first subset in this category is countries that may have made efforts, that may have included suggested actions reported in 2013, but because in more than an isolated incident was complicit in the use of forced child labor, received an assessment of No Advancement.

The second subset in this category is countries that took no suggested actions, made no meaningful efforts, and was complicit in the use of forced child labor in more than an isolated incident.

5. No Assessment. This assessment is reserved for countries in which the population of children is either non-existent or extremely small (under 50), or in which there is no evidence of a worst form of child labor problem and where the country has a good legal and enforcement framework on child labor. Currently, only certain territories and non-independent countries fall into these categories.

This assessment is also given to a country when it is included in the report for the first time. In addition, in cases when a country receives a suggested action for the first time, a country is given this assessment.

These assessments track government actions and compare countries against their own prior efforts. The assessments do not take into account the impact of the government actions on the problem, or whether they have a documented effect in eliminating the worst forms of child labor. This type of analysis would require rigorous impact evaluations and assessments based on data from solid research designs, which is beyond the scope of this report.

4.1 Children’s Work and Education Statistics: Sources and Definitions

Approximately 127 country profiles in this report include a statistical table (Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education) with data on the percent of working children, school attendance rate, percent of children who combine school and work, and/or primary completion rate. For a smaller set of profiles, the percent of children who work by sector is provided in a chart in each profile.

This section provides definitions and describes the sources for these data. This section also discusses some of the strengths and weaknesses of these data. While in a few cases more current sources of data may be available than those used here, the report uses the most reliable, standardized sources available to date to allow for cross-country comparisons. Because reliable child labor surveys are not available for many countries in some cases, USDOL uses statistics from child labor surveys that are more than 10 years old (data from 2004) at the time of writing this report. In the event that data did not exist from the sources described below, no other reliable and publicly available source of data exists for a country, or data exists but had not been analyzed to allow for cross-country comparisons, the report concludes that the statistics are “unavailable.”

Working Children (Children in Employment)

Many of the statistical tables in the country profiles in this report present data on the percentage and number of children in employment (working children) in the country in question. Data presented in the current report may differ from data that were presented in previous reports because more updated data have become available.

Definition

Children in employment or working children are those engaged in any economic activity for at least 1 hour during the reference period. Economic activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production (principally the production of goods and services for own use). The work children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child’s own household for an employer (paid or unpaid). This definition is in accordance with the Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labour (Resolution II) adopted by the 18th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS) in 2008 and the report, Marking Progress Against Child Labour, published by the ILO in 2013.(8, 50)

Children in Employment Versus Child Labor

This report presents statistics on working children rather than children involved in child labor. The definition of working children does not vary among countries. For this reason, statistics on working children are comparable across countries. In contrast, child labor statistics are based on national legislation, including, for example, the minimum age for work. The minimum age for work and other child labor standards vary from country to country. For that reason, child labor data are not comparable across countries.

Data Sources and Limitations

Data are from UCW project analysis of primarily four survey types: (1) ILO’s SIMPOC surveys; (2) UNICEF’s Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys (MICS); (3) World Bank-sponsored surveys, including Living Standards Measurement Surveys (LSMS), Priority Surveys, and others; and (4) other types of survey instruments including Labor Force Surveys (LFS) and Demographic and Health Surveys (DHS).(51) The first three survey programs are commonly recognized as being the primary sources for data on children’s work and child labor and, therefore, generally received priority over all other available data sources.(52)

According to UCW researchers, typical surveys on children’s work do not collect enough detailed information on children’s activities to accurately measure economic activity.<sup>(53)</sup> This sentiment was echoed in December 2008 at the 18th ILO International Conference of Labor Statisticians. A resolution was adopted at the conference that provides guidelines for governments on collecting child labor data. Specifically, the guidance indicates that countries may choose to use a broad framework to measure children’s work and child labor that encompasses unpaid household services or that countries may use a narrower definition of children’s work that excludes such services, as long as the definition used is clearly specified.<sup>(54)</sup> This resolution is contributing to the collection of more comparable data on children’s involvement in non-market activities.

In analyzing the data from the above-mentioned surveys, UCW attempted to apply a standard definition of children’s work. Although UNICEF MICS and ILO SIMPOC reports, for example, each use a different definition of work (as of the writing of this report, MICS survey reports include household chores in their definition of work, while SIMPOC reports do not), to the extent possible UCW applied a common definition of work to the micro-data described. To date, this has resulted in the individual analysis of more than 137 data sets. While every attempt was made to present a standardized child work statistic, there are differences across surveys that have the potential to affect the comparability of statistics across countries. Some of these differences are explained in greater detail here but in general include differing age groups, questionnaire content and wording, purpose of the survey, sample design, non-sampling errors, and year of data collection.

In general, data are presented for children ages 5-14, but some of the profiles present a work statistic for children ages 6-14, 7-14, or 10-14, depending on the age categories used in the original survey. The wording of work-related questions may also impact results. For example, the question on work in these surveys usually refers to work in the past 7 days; however, some surveys may refer to work activities in the past 12 months and are therefore likely to capture a higher proportion of working children than surveys with 7-day timeframes. The purpose of the survey—whether the survey is designed specifically to measure children’s work and child labor (SIMPOC surveys) or to measure the impact of poverty reduction programs (World Bank’s LSMS)—may affect estimates of children’s work. In addition, sample design may impact survey results. For example, children’s work is often geographically clustered, and SIMPOC surveys are designed to capture children’s work in such geographic areas. As a result, estimates of working children based on SIMPOC data are typically higher when compared to estimates based on LSMS surveys, which do not use the same sample design.<sup>(55)</sup> The ILO and UCW continue to investigate the effects of these survey differences on estimates of children’s work.

As noted, some country profiles also include the sector in which children reportedly work. For some surveys, sector of work was not reported by the entire sample of working children. Therefore, the distribution of children working by sector (i.e., agriculture, industry, and services) represents children with non-missing data for sector of work. For more information on the sectors of work reported in the chart, see section 1.5.2.2 of the Introduction.

Percent of Children Attending School

The percentage of children attending school is the share of all children within a specified age group that reported attending school. The UCW project data described above in the section “Working Children” are used to develop country-specific school attendance statistics. To be consistent with estimates of child work, the age group for which attendance statistics are calculated for children is generally ages 5-14 years. In some cases, however, different age categories are used, usually ranging from ages 6-14 years or 7-14 years.

Percent of Children Combining School and Work

The percentage of children who combine school and work is the share of all children within a specified age group reporting both working and attending school. The UCW project data described above in the section “Working Children” are used to develop country-specific statistics on children combining school and work. The age group for which these statistics are calculated is usually for children ages 7-14 years.

Primary Completion Rate

This report uses the “gross intake ratio in the last grade of primary” as a proxy measure for primary completion. This ratio is the total number of new entrants in the last grade of primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population at the theoretical entrance age to the last grade of primary. A high ratio indicates a high degree of current primary education completion. Because the calculation includes all new entrants to the last grade (regardless of age), the ratio can exceed 100 percent, due to over-aged and under-aged children who enter primary school late/early and/or repeat grades.

Unlike the other statistics presented in the country data tables, which are all based on UCW analysis as described above, the primary completion rate data is from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics. The data were downloaded on January 16, 2015, and are available at <http://www.uis.unesco.org/Pages/default.aspx?SPSLanguage=EN>.

For more information on this statistic, please see the UNESCO Institute for Statistics Glossary at <http://glossary.uis.unesco.org/glossary/en/home>.

GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Basic Education

Basic education comprises both formal schooling (primary and sometimes lower secondary), as well as a wide variety of non-formal and informal public and private educational activities offered to meet the defined basic learning needs of groups of people of all ages.

Source: UNESCO, Education for All: Year 2000 Assessment: Glossary [CD-ROM]. Paris; 2001.

Bonded Labor

Bonded labor or debt bondage is “the status or condition arising from a pledge by a debtor of his personal services or those of a person under his control as security for a debt if the value of those services as reasonably assessed is not applied towards the liquidation of the debt or the length and nature of those services are not respectively limited and defined,” as defined in the UN Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956).

Bonded labor typically occurs when a person who needs a loan and has no security to offer pledges his/her labor, or that of someone under his/her control, as a security for a loan. In some cases, the interest on the loan may be so high that it cannot be paid. In others, it may be deemed that the bonded individual’s work repays the interest on the loan but not the principal. Thus, the loan is inherited and perpetuated, and becomes an inter-generational debt.

Bonded labor is identified as one of the worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182.

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor

For the purposes of this report, categorical worst forms of child labor refers to child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182. This category does not include the worst forms of child labor as defined under Article 3(d). See “ILO Convention 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor.”

Child Domestic Worker

Child domestic workers or domestics are children who work in third party private households under an employment relationship. Child domestic workers engage in a variety of tasks, including cleaning, cooking, gardening, collecting water, and caring for children and the elderly. Child domestic workers sometimes have live-in arrangements, whereby they live in their employer’s household and work in exchange for room, board, and sometimes education. Child domestic workers are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including sexual, physical, and verbal abuse, in large part because they often depend on their employers for basic needs and work in locations hidden from public view.

Child Labor

Children in child labor are a subset of children in employment. It includes employment below the minimum age as established in national legislation (excluding permissible light work) and the worst forms of child labor, including hazardous unpaid household services. Child labor is thus a narrower concept than children in employment, as child labor excludes children who work only a few hours a week in permitted light work and those who are above the minimum age who engage in work not classified as a worst form of child labor.

Child Labor Elimination Projects

Since 1995, USDOL has funded over 270 projects in 92 countries. ILAB currently oversees more than $256 million of active programming to combat exploitative child labor. To date, USDOL-funded child labor elimination projects have rescued approximately 1.8 million children from exploitative child labor.

Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children

Based on the 1996 Declaration and Agenda for Action of the First World Congress Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children, commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) is defined as “sexual abuse by the adult and remuneration in cash or kind to the child or third person or persons.” The remuneration dynamic distinguishes CSEC from the sexual abuse of a child where commercial gain is absent, although sexual exploitation is also abuse. CSEC includes:

- Prostitution in the streets or indoors, in such places as brothels, discotheques, massage parlors, bars, hotels, and restaurants, among others;
- Child sex tourism;
- The production, promotion, and distribution of pornography involving children; and
- The use of children in sex shows (public or private).

ILO C. 182 prohibits the sale and trafficking of children and the use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

Compulsory Education

Compulsory education refers to the number of years or the age span during which children and youth are legally obliged to attend school.

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child spells out basic rights of children, such as the right to survival; to develop to the fullest; to protection from harmful influences, abuse, and exploitation; and to participate fully in family, cultural, and social life. The Convention protects children’s rights by setting standards in health care, education and legal, civil, and social services. According to Article 32 of the Convention, children have the right “to be protected from economic exploitation and from performing any work that is likely to be hazardous or to interfere with the child’s education, or to be harmful to the child’s health or physical, mental, spiritual, moral, or social development.”

Education for All

In 1990, delegates from more than 155 countries convened in Jomtien, Thailand, to create strategies for addressing the issues of education, literacy, and poverty reduction. Using the Universal Declaration of Human Rights as a basis for their work, participants established a set of goals to provide all children, especially girls, with the right to an education and to improve adult literacy around the world. The result was the World Declaration on Education for All (EFA). This declaration called for countries, by the end of the decade, to meet the basic learning needs of all children and adults, provide universal access to education for all, create equity in education for women and other underserved groups, focus on actual learning acquisition, broaden the types of educational opportunities available to people, and create better learning environments for students.

In April 2000, delegates gathered again for the World Education Forum in Dakar, Senegal. After reviewing the data gathered, it was clear that much more progress would be needed to achieve EFA. These delegates, from 164 countries, adopted the Dakar Framework for Action and renewed and strengthened their commitment to the achievement of quality basic education for all by the year 2015. The World Education Forum adopted six major goals for education to be achieved within 15 years, including the attainment of Universal Primary Education and gender equality, improving literacy and educational quality, and increasing life skills and early childhood education programs.

Forced Labor

Forced labor is defined in ILO Convention 29 as “all work or service which is exacted from any person under the menace of any penalty and for which the said person has not offered himself voluntarily.” In practice, it is the enslavement of workers through the threat or use of coercion, and it is primarily found among the most economically vulnerable members of society.

Forced or compulsory labor is identified as one of the worst forms of child labor in ILO C. 182.

The system of formalized transmission of knowledge and values operating within a given society usually provided through state-sponsored schools.

Source: ILO-IPEC, Child Labour: A Textbook for University Students, Appendix 2: Glossary, 288, Geneva, 2004.

Hazardous Work

Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182 provides a general definition of what is commonly referred to as “hazardous child labor: ... work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.” Under Article 4(1), the work referred to under Article 3(d) is to be determined by the laws, regulations, or competent authority of the country involved, and after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, taking into consideration relevant international standards.

Source: ILO Convention No. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labour, 1999; <http://www.ilo.org/ilolex/english/convdisp2.htm>.

ILO Convention 138: Minimum Age for Admission to Employment

ILO Convention 138 (ILO C. 138) was adopted in 1973 and serves as the principal ILO standard on child labor. Under Article 2(3) of ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, the minimum age of admission into employment or work in any occupation “shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling, and, in any case, shall not be less than fifteen.” Countries whose economy and educational facilities are insufficiently developed may initially specify a minimum legal working age of 14 when ratifying the Convention. Additionally, under Article 7(1), “National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work....” Countries that specify a minimum legal working age of 14 years may permit light work for persons ages 12-14 years.

Source: ILO Convention No. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment, 1973; <http://www.ilo.org/ilolex/english/convdisp2.htm>.

ILO Convention 182: Worst Forms of Child Labor

ILO Convention 182 (ILO C. 182) was adopted in 1999. It commits ratifying nations to take immediate action to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labor. Under Article 3 of the Convention, the worst forms of child labor comprise:

- (a) All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery, such as the sale and trafficking of children, debt bondage and serfdom, and forced or compulsory labor, including forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict;
- (b) The use, procuring, or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography, or for pornographic purposes;
- (c) The use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs as defined in the relevant international treaties; and
- (d) Work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety, or morals of children.

Among other actions, ILO C. 182 requires ratifying nations to remove children from abusive child labor and provide them with rehabilitation, social reintegration, and access to free basic education and vocational training; consult with employer and worker organizations to create appropriate mechanisms to monitor implementation of the Convention; take into account the special vulnerability of girls; and provide assistance and/or cooperate with efforts of other members to implement the Convention.

ILO-IPEC: International Program on the Elimination of Child Labor

In 1992, ILO created IPEC to work toward the progressive elimination of child labor by strengthening national capacities to address child labor problems, and by creating a worldwide movement to combat it. Although ILO-IPEC aims to address all forms of child labor, its focus is on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor.

Countries participating in ILO-IPEC usually sign a MOU outlining the development and implementation of ILO-IPEC activities and the efforts to be undertaken by governments to progressively eradicate child labor. ILO-IPEC National Program Steering Committees are then established with the participation of governments, industry and labor representatives, and experienced NGOs. ILO-IPEC provides technical assistance to governments, but most of the direct action programs for children are carried out by local NGOs and workers' and employers' organizations. ILO-IPEC activities include awareness raising about child labor problems; capacity building for government agencies and statistical organizations; advice and support for direct action projects to withdraw working children from the workplace; and assistance to governments in drawing up national policies and legislation.

ILO Recommendation 190: Worst Forms of Child Labor

ILO Recommendation 190 (ILO R. 190) supplements the provisions of ILO C. 182 and provides guidance to ratifying countries regarding its implementation. The Recommendation describes populations in need of specific attention regarding the worst forms of child labor, such as girls and children involved in hidden forms of work. It further provides guidelines to assist countries in determining the kinds of hazardous work that should be considered worst forms and thus prohibited to children. Finally, Recommendation 190 provides guidance regarding specific steps countries that have ratified ILO C. 182 should take in order to combat the worst forms of child labor, such as the collection and exchange of data on both the problem and best practices to address it; passage and enforcement of laws that penalize violations with criminal penalties; awareness raising about the problem; establishment of policies against the worst forms of child labor; and international cooperation through technical, legal, and other forms of assistance.

Informal Sector

While the concept of the informal sector was introduced into international usage in the 1970s, it was only in 1993 at the 15th International Conference of Labor Statisticians that an internationally-recognized definition for data collection was established, delineating the informal sector as unincorporated, small and/or unregistered enterprises, and the employees of those enterprises. An enterprise is unincorporated if no complete set of accounts are available that would permit a financial separation of the activities of the enterprise from that of its owner(s), and it produces marketable goods or services. The registration and size criteria are determined according to national circumstances and legislation, which provides a degree of flexibility in identifying the informal sector from country to country. However, all interpretations of this sector share the notion of enterprises whose activities are not covered or are insufficiently covered by law or whose activities are not covered by law in practice, meaning that the relevant law is not applied or enforced. Workers in such enterprises often lack the benefits of regular, stable, and protected employment. Because employers in the informal sector are generally not held accountable for complying with labor protections, including occupational safety measures, children who work in “hazardous” or “ultra-hazardous” informal settings likely face increased risk of injury. In addition, because businesses in the informal sector are not usually included in official statistics, children working in informal sector enterprises may not be counted in labor force activity rates.

Boys selling fruit and ice cream in the streets of Cotagaita, Bolivia. © Paola Aguilera

Light Work

This report uses the definition of light work as established in ILO C. 138, Minimum Age for Admission to Employment. Under Article 7(1) of the Convention, “National laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work which is—(a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received.” Countries that have specified a minimum legal working age of 14 years may permit the employment or work of persons 12-14 years of age on light work as defined in Article 7(1), but should specify limitations on their hours of work as well as activities.

Source: ILO Convention No. 138, Minimum Age for Employment, (1973), Article 3; <http://www.ilo.org/ilolex/english/convdisp2.htm>.

Minimum Age of Work

The minimum age of work is the age at which a child can enter into work. ILO C. 138 states that the minimum age for admission to employment should not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling and should not be less than 15 years (14 for developing countries).

Source: ILO-IPEC, Child Labour: A Textbook for University Students, Appendix 2: Glossary, 290, Geneva; 2004.

Non-Formal Education

Any organized educational activity outside the established formal school system – whether operating separately or as an important feature of some broader activity – that is intended to serve identifiable learning objectives. Non-formal or transitional education programs can enable former child workers to “catch up” or be “mainstreamed” with their peers who began their schooling at the appropriate age.

Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper

A Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (PRSP) is a document written by the government of a developing country with the participation of civil society to serve as the basis for concessional lending from the World Bank and IMF, as well as debt relief under the World Bank's Highly Indebted Poor Countries Initiative. A PRSP should measure poverty in the country, identify goals for reducing poverty, and create a spending and policy program for reaching those goals. A PRSP should also ensure that a country's macroeconomic, structural, and social policies are consistent with the objectives of poverty reduction and social development. A new PRSP must be written every 3 years in order to continue receiving assistance from International Financial Institutions such as the World Bank.

Primary Education

Primary education, sometimes called elementary education, refers to school usually beginning at 5 or 7 years of age and covering about 6 years of full-time schooling. In countries with compulsory education laws, primary education generally constitutes the first (and sometimes only) cycle of compulsory education.

Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime (Palermo Protocol)

The Palermo Protocol, as the protocol supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime is commonly known, covers trafficking of children, also delineated as a worst form under ILO C. 182, Article 3(a).

Ratification

Ratification is a serious undertaking by a State formally accepting the terms of an international agreement, thereby becoming legally bound to apply it. Other ways of becoming bound to an international agreement include acceptance, approval, accession, signature, or an exchange of notes.

In order to ratify an agreement, a country must, if necessary, adopt new laws and regulations or modify the existing legislation and practice to support the agreement, and formally deposit the instruments of ratification with the appropriate depository. (In the case of ILO Conventions, ratifications must be registered with the Director-General of the ILO International Labor Office.)

For certain international agreements that require ratification, signing an agreement or enacting an agreement into domestic law by Congress, or a similar state organ, does not mean that the international agreement has been ratified. Signing an international agreement serves as a preliminary endorsement, albeit a formality, as signatories are not bound by the terms of the international agreement or in any way committed to proceed to the final step of ratification. However, a signatory is obliged to refrain from acts which would defeat the object and purpose of the international agreement, unless it makes its intention not to become a party to the international agreement clear. Similarly, appropriate state entities may signal approval of an international agreement, but that is only one of the requisite steps on the path toward official ratification. The final step requires that the instruments of ratification be submitted to the depositary.

In the case of ILO Conventions, ILO procedures provide the option to ratify or not ratify a Convention, but do not include the option to sign a Convention as a preliminary endorsement. Generally, an ILO Convention comes into force in a ratifying country 12 months after the government has deposited the requisite instrument of ratification. This grace period provides ILO members time to enact or modify legislation to comply with the Convention before it comes into force.

Timebound Program

ILO C. 182 calls for timebound measures to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Timebound Programs were spearheaded by ILO-IPEC and are carried out by governments with support from the UN organization. The programs aim to prevent and eliminate all incidences of the worst forms of child labor in a country within a defined period.

Trafficking of Children

The Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children provides a commonly accepted definition of human trafficking. It states: “(a) ‘trafficking in persons’ shall mean the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring, or receipt of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability, or of the giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation. Exploitation shall include, at a minimum, the exploitation of the prostitution of others or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labor or services, slavery or practices similar to slavery, servitude or the removal of organs.” It goes on to state: “(c) the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harbouring or receipt of a child for the purpose of exploitation shall be considered ‘trafficking in persons’ even if this does not involve any of the means set forth in subparagraph (a) of this Article.”

The trafficking of children is identified as a worst form of child labor in ILO C. 182, Article 3(a).

Unpaid Household Services

For the purposes of this report, the term “unpaid household services” by children refers to the domestic and personal services performed by a child within the child’s own household under the following conditions: (a) for long hours; (b) in an unhealthy environment, including equipment or heavy loads; or (c) in dangerous locations.

Working Children (Children in Employment)

Children in employment or working children are those engaged in any economic activity for at least 1 hour during the reference period. Economic activity includes market production and certain types of non-market production (principally the production of goods and services for own use). The work children perform may be in the formal or informal economy, inside or outside family settings, for pay or profit. This includes children working in domestic service outside the child's own household for an employer (paid or unpaid). This definition is in accordance with the Resolution Concerning Statistics of Child Labour (Resolution II) adopted by the 18th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS) in 2008 and the report, Marking Progress against Child Labour, published by the ILO in 2013.

In 2014, Afghanistan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Afghanistan announced the adoption of a list of 29 occupations and working conditions prohibited for children. The Government also took steps to combat child trafficking by acceding to the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons and issuing a directive to improve enforcement of the current law on human trafficking. In addition, the Government passed a law criminalizing the recruitment of children under age 18 into state security institutions and the Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict approved a new roadmap to support efforts to end underage recruitment. However, children in Afghanistan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced production of bricks. Children also continued to be recruited and used for military purposes by non-state groups, and were in limited instances used by some members of state groups to carry out specific tasks. Afghanistan's labor inspectorate does not have legal authority to enforce child labor laws, and the Government lacks programs to eliminate child labor in certain sectors in which it is prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Afghanistan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced production of bricks.(1, 2) Children continue to be recruited and used for military purposes by non-state groups, as well as by state groups.(3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Afghanistan. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	7.5 (673,949)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	41.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Domestic work (1, 8)
	Gathering firewood and transporting water and goods (18, 19)
	Street work, including vending, shoe shining, carrying goods and begging (1, 8, 20, 21)
	Collecting garbage† (8, 19)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Used in illicit activities, including in the trafficking of drugs (1, 8, 16, 22, 23)
	Used in armed conflict as combatants, informants, and suicide bombers, and to manufacture, transport, and plant improvised explosive devices sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment by non-state groups (1, 24-29)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (16, 19, 30, 31)
	Forced labor in the production of bricks, poppies,* and carpets,* in begging, in construction, and in domestic work each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 2, 10, 16, 19, 32, 33)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C 182.

Non-state groups routinely use children for military purposes in Afghanistan.(1, 24-27) In 2014, the UN verified 20 cases of the recruitment of children for use in armed conflict by non-state armed groups.(34) Non-state-armed groups—such as the Haqqani Network, Hezb-i-Islami, Tora Bora Military Front, Jamat Sunat al-Dawa Salafia, and the Taliban—use children as soldiers. The Taliban and the Haqqani Network also use children to carry out suicide attacks, and to manufacture, transport, and plant improvised explosive devices.(1, 8, 24, 27, 35) Children were used by the Afghan National Security Forces in a limited number of cases. During the reporting period, the UN verified the recruitment and use of one child by the Afghan National Police (ANP) and one child by the Afghan Local Police (ALP).(34)

Children, especially boys, are subject to commercial sexual exploitation throughout the country. The practice of bacha baazi (boy play), in which men keep young boys for social and sexual entertainment, is particularly prevalent.(31, 36) In many cases, these boys are dressed in female clothing, used as dancers at parties and ceremonies, and sexually exploited.(1, 31, 37) There have been reports that some government officials, including members of the Afghan National Police (ANP) and the Afghan Border Police (ABD), use boys working as tea servers or cooks in police camps for the purpose of bacha baazi.(31, 36)

In Afghanistan, children are most commonly trafficked internally for labor exploitation in carpet weaving, brick making, domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, begging, and drug smuggling.(32) Children are trafficked transnationally, primarily to Pakistan, Iran, India, and Saudi Arabia, for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in begging, domestic work, drug smuggling, and in the construction and agricultural sectors.(16, 32) There are reports that girls from other countries are trafficked to Afghanistan for commercial sexual exploitation.(16, 32)

Afghanistan is plagued by insecurity and violence; this has led to grave abuses against children.(38, 39) According to a UN report, by mid-2014 there were 683,000 civilians internally displaced due to armed conflict.(40) Reports note that children who are living in isolated, conflict-affected areas and others who are internally displaced by conflict are at risk of being recruited into non-state-armed groups. Reports also note that children—particularly girls in conflict areas—have limited access to education.(3, 19, 38, 41) The UN General Assembly Security Council verified 167 incidents of violence targeting education facilities and personnel in 2014, including attacks on schools, teachers, staff, as well as students. Due to insecurity, at least 365 schools throughout the country remained closed in 2014.(34) These conditions make it difficult for children to attend school on a regular basis, which may increase their vulnerability to exploitation in child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Afghanistan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 13 of the Labor Law (42)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 13 and 120 of the Labor Law (42)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		List of Prohibited Jobs for Child Laborers (43, 44)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 4 of the Labor Law; Article 49 of the Constitution (42, 45)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Decree of the President of the Islamic Republic of Afghanistan Concerning the Enforcement of the Law on Combating Abduction and Human Trafficking/Smuggling; Article 516 of the Penal Code (46, 47)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Law on Elimination of Violence Against Women (48){, 2009 #261}
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		List of Prohibited Jobs for Child Laborers; Article 430 of the Penal Code (8, 43, 44)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Presidential Decree, 2003 (26)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 43 of the Constitution (28, 45)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 43 of the Constitution (28, 45)

*No conscription (26)

During the reporting period, the Government of Afghanistan acceded to the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.(36) Additionally, in February 2014, the Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs and Disabled (MoLSAMD) released a list of 29 hazardous jobs and/or working conditions prohibited for children. The list includes mining, begging, agricultural production and processing of narcotics, working for more than 4 hours in the carpet sector, and bonded labor.(43, 44, 49) However, as the labor inspectorate lacks the legal authority to enforce laws relating to child labor, this list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children, as well as the minimum age provisions of the law, cannot be enforced. (28, 42) The ILO and MoLSAMD have developed a revised version of the Labor Law, which would strengthen worker protection and provide penalties for child labor violations. However, at the close of the reporting period, the new law was still under review at the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) and had not yet been approved by the Council of Ministers and Parliament.(50)

Afghan law does not comprehensively protect children from commercial sexual exploitation.(47) While the 2009 Elimination of Violence Against Women Act protects females from forced prostitution, it does not make mention of males.(48) In addition, the Penal Code does not explicitly forbid the production, distribution, benefiting from, or possession of child pornography.(28, 47) In 2014, the Government issued a directive that calls for enforcement of the provisions set forth in the Law on Human Trafficking to ensure that victims of trafficking in persons receive appropriate social services instead of being prosecuted for any violation of Afghan law. (32, 36) However, despite these efforts, the legal definition of human trafficking in Afghanistan remains unclear. The Dari language does not distinguish between human trafficking and human smuggling, leading to complications in enforcement and data collection efforts.(16) The Ministry of Justice (MOJ) reported that it is currently drafting a new law to address this ambiguity.(51)

During the reporting period, the parliament passed a law criminalizing the recruitment of child soldiers into the Government's security forces and establishing a penalty of 1 to 7 years' imprisonment for violations of the law.(28, 34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs, and Disabled (MoLSAMD)	Enforce laws related to child labor, including hazardous child labor.(8) Provide assistance to victims of human trafficking through support center in Kabul.(36)
Child Protection Action Network (CPAN)	Conduct child labor inspections. Refer children identified as engaged in hazardous child labor to NGO and government shelters that provide protection and social services.(8, 28)
Ministry of Interior (MOI)	Enforce laws related to child trafficking, the use of children in illicit activities, and child sexual exploitation.(8)
National Directorate of Security (NDS)	Identify human trafficking victims and refer these cases to the MOI.(52)
Attorney General's Office (AGO)	Investigate and prosecute human trafficking and abduction cases.(52)
Ministry of Women's Affairs (MOWA)	Register abduction and human trafficking cases and provide support to child labor and trafficking victims.(8, 52)
Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC)	Raise awareness on human trafficking through monitoring of cases and advocacy on the issue.(52)

Law enforcement agencies in Afghanistan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs, and Disabled (MoLSAMD) employed 26 labor inspectors. Research did not confirm whether monitoring for child labor violations is a regular part of labor inspections.(28) The primary mechanism for responding to child labor cases is the MoLSAMD-affiliated Child Protection Action Network (CPAN), a coalition of government, NGO, community, and religious leaders. There are 19 CPAN technical advisors who conduct child labor inspections across Afghanistan's 34 provinces.(28) CPAN technical advisors did not receive training on child labor laws and regulations in 2014.(28) Both government and NGO sources consider the number of inspectors to be insufficient to effectively enforce Afghan laws on child labor.(28)

CPAN technical advisors carried out 350 inspections during the reporting period, which included site visits to various government, non-governmental, and private workplaces. According to MoLSAMD, most inspections are conducted based on a regular work plan, and technical advisors may also follow up on specific complaints.(28) Technical advisors were able to carry out unannounced inspections in 2014; however, neither MoLSAMD nor CPAN have legal authority to enforce child labor laws. During the reporting period, MoLSAMD and CPAN did not officially identify any children engaged in child labor or refer them to appropriate social services.(28) Government officials and civil society representatives agreed that the number and quality of inspections conducted during the reporting period, as well as the number of child labor violations discovered, was not adequate given the size of the child labor problem in Afghanistan.(28)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Interior (MOI) was responsible for investigating crimes related to child trafficking, child sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. MOI maintained an anti-trafficking in persons unit comprised of 13 officers and three non-commissioned officers, with an additional two officers in each of the 34 provinces.(8, 28, 36) The National Directorate of Security (NDS) also employed 37 human trafficking investigators in provincial offices. Both the MOI and NGO officials consider the total number of officers insufficient to address the problem of child trafficking, especially as officers were sometimes assigned to other security-related tasks.(8, 28, 36, 52) Furthermore, officers are not responsible for investigating or enforcing child labor laws in cases that do not involve human trafficking, leaving children who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor but have not been trafficked, without protection.(28)

During the reporting period, 30 representatives from the Afghan National Police (ANP), the Afghan Border Police (ABP), and the judiciary participated in a two-day workshop facilitated by the IOM that focused on improving understanding of the legal framework for human trafficking and on determining procedures for identifying and protecting victims.(53) The U.S. Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs provided 10 additional anti-trafficking training sessions for Afghan law enforcement personnel and representatives from government ministries.(36) However, the MOI and NGOs reported that overall anti-trafficking training efforts were not adequate.(8, 36) Government funding for investigations is also inadequate; as a result, investigators often do not have sufficient facilities, transportation, and other resources necessary to carry out their duties.(8, 28)

According to the NDS, the Government investigated 42 cases of human trafficking in 2014, of which 26 involved children.(36) Government agencies generally refer victims of human trafficking to NGO-run shelters, a practice that the IOM and NGOs consider relatively effective. Shelters use a standardized form developed by the Ministry of Public Health to help identify victims.(36) However, sources reported that male child victims of human trafficking, especially those who were engaged in commercial sexual exploitation or were used as child soldiers, are sometimes referred to juvenile detention and rehabilitation facilities, where they do not receive appropriate victim support services. The UN noted that some children detained in juvenile rehabilitation centers as a result of their association with armed groups reported being subjected to torture and ill-treatment.(34)

The MOI maintains records of prosecutions and convictions related to human trafficking through the computerized Case Management System (CMS), which is currently used in 18 provinces and is continuing to expand across the country.(28) Data from the CMS revealed 27 registered human trafficking cases, eight of which resulted in convictions and prison sentences ranging from one to five years. These records do not specify whether the cases pertain to an alleged trafficker of adults or of children, and there is no disaggregated information available at the national level.(28) Information is also not available on the number of prosecutions and convictions for crimes related to other worst forms of child labor apart from human trafficking.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government of Afghanistan has established coordinating mechanisms to address certain forms of child labor, research found no evidence of an overall mechanism to combat child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
High Commission for Combating Crimes of Abduction and Human Trafficking (High Commission)	Address trafficking in persons in general, including child trafficking. Led by the Minister of Justice (MOJ) and composed of the National Directorate of Security (NDS), the Attorney General's Office (AGO), the Afghan Independent Bar Association, the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC), the Afghan Women Skills Development Center, and nine government ministries, including the Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs, and Disabled (MoLSAMD), the Ministry of Public Health (MoPH), and the Ministry of Women's Affairs (MOWA).(8, 36, 52)
Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict	Coordinate efforts to eliminate the recruitment and use of child soldiers.(54) Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and monitored by the UN Task Force on Children and Armed Conflict, which is composed of UN and NGO members.(54)

In 2014, the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC) appointed two employees to provide technical assistance to the High Commission, which met four times during the year.(36)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Afghanistan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy for Children at Risk	Creates a framework to support at-risk children and their families with new and existing social services; develops a strategic plan to build the capacity of child-based organizations into broader family- and community-based institutions; and guides donors in contributing toward a comprehensive child protection system. Focuses specifically on working children, trafficked children, and child soldiers and other children affected by conflict.(55)
National Strategy for Street Working Children (2011–2014)	Guides and informs the Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, Martyrs, and Disabled (MoLSAMD) and other relevant ministries, international organizations, and NGOs to provide effective and sustainable interventions like family- and community-based support systems for street children and their families in order to protect, prevent, and reduce the number of children working on the streets.(56)
Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment	Aims to prevent the recruitment of minors into the Afghan National Security Forces (ANSF), which includes the Afghan National Army (ANA), the Afghan National Police (ANP), the National Directory of Security (NDS), and pro-government militia groups.(57-59) Seeks to ensure the release of children under age 18 from armed forces and to facilitate their reintegration into families and communities.(60) In November 2014, government stakeholders participated in a workshop to identify key criteria for developing standardized age-verification procedures across ANSF.(61)
Road Map Towards Full Compliance of the Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment†	Supports and expedites implementation of the Action Plan for the Prevention of Underage Recruitment. Identifies 15 priority areas, including criminalization of the recruitment and use of children by national security forces; development of a policy to protect children arrested and detained on national security-related charges; improved age verification procedures; establishment of a national monitoring system; and endorsement of a national birth registration strategy. On July 23, the Inter-Ministerial Steering Committee on Children and Armed Conflict formally endorsed the Road Map, developed through collaboration with the UN and relevant government agencies.(28, 34)
National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons	Creates a timeline for specific actions to be taken by members of the High Commission to address trafficking.(16) Includes objectives to improve the anti-trafficking legal framework, increase awareness about the trafficking of male children, and improve victim rehabilitation programs for boys.(62)
National Education Strategic Plan (2010–2014)*	Establishes five overarching education goals, including improving access to quality education.(63)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

During the reporting period, the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission (AIHRC) published a legally mandated National Inquiry to analyze the causes and negative consequences of the practice of bacha baazi in Afghanistan.(31) The Inquiry included 71 focus group sessions and 17 public hearings in 17 provinces, and it involved approximately 2,200 people.(64) As a result, the AIHRC made recommendations to the Government for improving the legal framework for the prohibition of the commercial sexual exploitation of boys.(8)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Afghanistan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Prevent Child Labor in Home-Based Carpet Production in Afghanistan	USDOL-funded, 4-year, $2 million project implemented by GoodWeave. Aims to build market preferences for child labor-free Afghan carpets; contribute to evidence-based knowledge of child labor in the Afghanistan carpet sector; and increase public awareness and engagement on the issue of child labor in the Afghan carpet sector.(65) In 2014, the first phase of research on the prevalence of child labor in the carpet sector was completed.(10)

Program	Description
Age Verification of New ANSF Recruits‡	Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Ministry of Defense, MOI, NDS, and UNICEF program that operates Child Protection Units within the Afghan National Security Forces (ANSF) recruitment centers. Aims to ensure that new recruits meet the minimum age requirement of 18 years by carefully screening applicants.(24, 66) Process includes an ID check and a requirement that at least two community elders vouch that a recruit is 18-years-old and is eligible to join the ANSF, in an effort to address the use of the fraudulent IDs sometimes presented by minors. (67) In 2014, Child Protection Units in four provinces rejected 156 children under age 18 who attempted to enlist in the Afghan National Police (ANP).(34)
Trafficking Shelters‡	MoLSAMD-funded and NGO-operated shelter for human trafficking victims. Provides food, clothing, medical care, counseling, psychosocial support, and vocational and academic training. MoLSAMD registers victims and provides reintegration assistance.(36, 52) An additional shelter is available for boy victims of human trafficking in Kabul funded by the U.S. Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement and operated by Hagar International.(51)
Counter-Trafficking Program	USDOS Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons-funded project implemented by Hagar International in collaboration with IOM. Provides counter-trafficking training for law enforcement officials in four provinces and aims to facilitate information-sharing and collaboration on counter-trafficking activities between government and civil society actors.(36, 68)
Safety Nets and Pensions Support Project (2009-2016)*	$7.5 million World Bank-funded, 7-year project implemented by MoLSAMD that provides cash support on a case-by-case basis to poor families with children under the age of 5 years in three provinces. Targets highly impoverished families, including children who are at risk of child labor.(8, 69)
Protracted Relief and Recovery Operation*†	$496 million WFP-funded, 3-year project that enhances food security and nutrition for 3.7 million beneficiaries in 184 food insecure districts. Through this project, people affected by conflict, disaster or economic stress are assisted with food, vouchers, or cash; children receive targeted supplementary feeding; schools are supported to increase enrollment and attendance; and adults are provided with vocational training.(70)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

Although the Government has implemented programs that seek to prevent the recruitment and use of child soldiers in the Afghan National Security Forces, research found no evidence it has carried out programs to remove or rehabilitate children involved in armed conflict. There is also no evidence of programs designed specifically to prevent and eliminate child labor in agriculture and forced child labor in the production of bricks.

Due to lack of funding, in 2014 MoLSAMD closed three of four shelters for victims of human trafficking that were previously operated by IOM.(36) Research found that shelters and support services for male child trafficking victims over the age of ten were particularly limited.(29)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Afghanistan (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that law protects all children, including boys, from commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure that law clearly prohibits the production, distribution, benefiting from, and possession of child pornography.	2014
	Clearly define human trafficking in accordance with international standards.	2011 – 2014
Enforcement	Provide training for labor inspectors and government officials on the enforcement of child labor laws and regulations.	2011 – 2014
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure that the labor inspectorate has legal authority to enforce child labor laws.	2014
	Ensure that MoLSAMD and CPAN conduct an adequate number of child labor inspections.	2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Establish a referral mechanism to ensure that child laborers identified through labor inspections receive support services that address their needs.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure that there are investigators to enforce criminal laws regarding the worst forms of child labor unrelated to human trafficking.	2014
	Provide a budget for the Ministry of Interior (MOI) to enforce laws concerning the worst forms of child labor.	2012 – 2014
	Ensure that male child victims of human trafficking and other worst forms of child labor are correctly identified as victims and referred to appropriate social services, and that children held in juvenile detention or rehabilitation facilities are not subject to mistreatment or torture.	2014
	Make data publicly available on the number of prosecutions and convictions for all crimes related to the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2014
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms.	2013 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2009 – 2014
Social Programs	Institute programs to increase access to education and to improve security in schools, especially for girls.	2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor, including its worst forms.	2013 – 2014
	Implement rehabilitation and reintegration programs for children affected by armed conflict.	2009 – 2014
	Create programs to address child labor in agriculture and forced child labor in bricks.	2009 – 2014
	Provide financial support to reopen shelters for victims of human trafficking and ensure that there are sufficient shelter services available for older male child trafficking victims.	2010 – 2014

In 2014, Albania made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government participated in and supported the publication of the first national assessment of street children in Albania, providing valuable data on the demographics and work activities of street children. The National Council for the Protection of Children's Rights also held its first meeting after having remained inactive since its launch in 2011. The Government also trained labor inspectors, police officers, prosecutors, and judges on human trafficking issues. However, children in Albania are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging. The Government does not have sufficient resources to enforce laws on child labor, including its worst forms. In addition, programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Albania are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-6) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging.(3-7) During the reporting period, the Government supported the publication of the first national assessment of children living and working on the street in Albania.(5) The report showed that the most common forms of street work among these children are vending, begging, and busking. The majority of children interviewed (96 percent) reported family income generation as their reason for engaging in street work.(5) Data also showed that 74.3 percent of street children belong to the Roma and Egyptian communities, indicating that a disproportionately high number of children working on the street belong to ethnic minority groups.(5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Albania. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

	Forced begging sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3-7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Albania is a source country for children trafficked abroad to neighboring countries such as Kosovo, Macedonia, and Montenegro, as well as to EU countries for commercial sexual exploitation and forced begging.(2, 18) In addition, research found an increase in internal trafficking and forced begging during the reporting period.(2, 18) Street children were at the greatest risk of becoming victims of human trafficking. Ethnic minority children from the Roma and Egyptian communities make up the majority of child trafficking victims.(2-5, 7) Unaccompanied minors from northern Albania moving to Belgium, England, France, and Germany during the reporting period were also vulnerable to trafficking and increased in numbers during the reporting period.(18) Approximately 50 percent of trafficking victims in Albania in 2014 were minors.(18)

The majority of children engaged in child labor in Albania work in the agriculture sector. However, there is little information available about the specific work activities in which these children are engaged.(1-5)

Although the Constitution of the Republic of Albania and the Law on Pre-University Education guarantee free public education, children without birth certificates are unable to attend school.(3) The Government registered 141 previously unregistered children in 2014, but residency requirements continue to make it difficult for Roma and Egyptian families in particular to acquire birth registration for their children.(3, 12, 18) Lack of registration often prevents children in this community from accessing education and other social services.(3, 12) Children who do not have access to education and other social services are at an increased risk of exploitation in child labor. In addition, the costs of school supplies and classroom resources are prohibitive for low-income families.(2)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Albania has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

Free Public Education	Yes		Article 57 of the Constitution of the Republic of Albania; Article 5 of the Law on Pre-University Education System (27, 28)

Although the minimum age for work is 16, children between the ages of 14 and 16 may be employed during school holidays, provided that the employment is not harmful to their health and development.(19) However, there is no definition of what constitutes permissible school holiday work or the number of hours or conditions that would render employment acceptable.(29)

In October 2014, the Government amended the Law on Compulsory Health Care Insurance in the Republic of Albania to provide victims of human trafficking, including child victims, with free health care. In November, the Council of Ministers passed an additional decision providing trafficking victims with free mental health care.(18)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Labor Inspectorate (SLI) under the Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth	Enforce labor laws, including laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor. File and respond to child labor complaints.(6)
Social Services Agency under the Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth	File and respond to child labor complaints.(6)
General Directorate of Police and Regional Directorate of Police under the Ministry of Interior	Enforce all laws, including child labor and child trafficking laws.(4)
Serious Crimes Prosecution Office	Investigate and prosecute cases involving human trafficking, including child trafficking.(4, 30)

Albania

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Organization/Agency	Role
Child Rights Units (CRUs)	Monitor the situation of high-risk children and families at the regional level, coordinate protection and referral activities at the local level, and identify and manage individual cases.(4, 31, 32)
Child Protection Units (CPUs)	Identify children in danger at the municipal level and subsequently refer them to a safe environment, as defined by the State Social Services.(4, 33, 34)
National Referral Mechanism (NRM)	Coordinate the identification, protection, referral, and rehabilitation of trafficking victims between government and civil society organizations. Chaired by the Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings (ONAC).(18) The NRM met regularly during the reporting period.(18)

Law enforcement agencies in Albania took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the State Labor Inspectorate (SLI) employed 98 inspectors.(6) In July 2014, 20 labor inspectors received training on proactive identification and referral of forced labor and labor exploitation cases, with a focus on children.(18) However, a source reported that more training on child labor laws is needed. In addition, a lack of adequate office space, transportation, and training compromises the quality of inspections.(6)

During the reporting period, the SLI conducted 42 inspections of businesses in which children were employed. Inspectors performed both proactive and complaint-based inspections, including unannounced inspections.(6) The SLI identified 28 cases of child labor during these inspections; however, no penalties or citations for child labor law violations were issued.(6, 12) A source reported that the number of inspections was inadequate, given the scope of the child labor problem.(6) In addition, although the National Referral Mechanism (NRM) exists for victims of child trafficking, research found no evidence of a referral mechanism between the SLI or criminal investigators and social service providers for children victims of exploitative labor conditions unconnected with human trafficking.

Criminal Law Enforcement

Nationwide, there are approximately 15 police officers dedicated to child rights, which is inadequate to address the scope of the problem. The Ombudsman of the Government of Albania has recommended that each of the approximately 44 police commissariats have several child rights investigators.(6) During the reporting period, prosecutors, judges, and police officers attended multiple trainings on human trafficking issues, including one on the legal standard of child treatment in the justice system and the protocol for investigation and trial of criminal offences involving children, and another on standards for the protection of victims and witnesses in child sexual abuse cases.(18, 30)

In 2014, the Government reported prosecuting four cases of child labor, resulting in two convictions.(6) One perpetrator was sentenced to 2 years and a second was sentenced to 1 year and 4 months of imprisonment.(6) In addition, as part of a new program to assist street children, 5 individuals were arrested and charged with exploitation of children for begging, and 2 parents were prosecuted for child exploitation.(18) The Government also referred 9 cases of child trafficking to prosecution. The Government tried 3 cases involving child trafficking during the reporting period, resulting in 3 convictions and prison sentences of 10 years or more.(18) Given the scope of the problem, the number of investigations and prosecutions for child trafficking are not adequate. In addition, NGOs report that laws prohibiting the production and possession of child pornography are rarely enforced.(3)

In 2014, the police also launched a large-scale operation in the Albanian town of Lazarat, a hub for marijuana production in southern Albania. This operation is believed to have significantly decreased the number of children working in marijuana production; however, long-term results remain to be monitored.(18)

In 2014, the Government completed the establishment of Child Rights Units (CRUs) in all 12 regions of Albania and increased the number of Child Protection Units (CPUs) to 196, covering half of the territory of Albania.(6) CPUs managed approximately 1,159 cases of at-risk children from January to June 2014, including identifying 490 new cases for the year.(12) However, CPUs and

CRUs often receive inadequate funding for child protection, and the Ombudsman has noted that the effectiveness of these units is often low.(4, 6, 30, 35)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for the Protection of the Rights of Children (NCPRC)	Coordinate the protection of children's rights, including children involved in child labor. Members include the Ministers of Welfare, Education, Justice, and Interior, as well as representatives from the President's Office and NGOs.(3) Due to a change of government after the June 2013 elections, in October 2014 the NCPRC held its first meeting with new members, having remained inactive since it was first launched in November 2011.(6)
Office of the National Coordinator for the Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings (ONAC)	Coordinate all anti-trafficking efforts in Albania. Serve as chair of the State Committee Against Trafficking in Persons, a deputy minister-level working group that sets the Government's policy on combating human trafficking. Oversee 12 regional anti-trafficking committees that carry out local action plans in cooperation with civil society partners.(30) In 2014, ONAC held regular meetings with the regional committees, facilitating their adoption of regional action plans. Also in 2014, ONAC received a separate state budget for the first time, allowing the office to independently support its own operations.(18)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Albania has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Action Plan for Children (2012–2015)	Aims to promote comprehensive, harmonized, and coordinated policies of social protection and social inclusion of children; also emphasizes the strengthening of institutional structures set up to monitor and report on the implementation of the rights of children at the national and regional levels. Includes a strategic objective on protecting children from the worst forms of child labor, through strengthening prevention measures and increasing the SLI's role in preventing child labor.(12)
Albanian Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016	Outlines a plan to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Albania by 2016.(36) Includes the adoption and implementation of effective legislation and law enforcement to address the worst forms of child labor; the provision of free, quality education for all children; the provision of social protection to families and children in need; and the implementation of labor market policies that promote youth employment and the regulation and formalization of the informal economy.(36)
Strategy for Combating Trafficking in Persons and Action Plan (2014–2017)†	Outlines plan to improve law enforcement, build the capacity of social services programs that provide services to victims, and improve interagency coordination. Includes the goals of increasing successful prosecutions for child trafficking and increasing the sensitivity of the investigation and prosecution processes to the needs of child victims.(37)
National Action Plan for the Decade of Roma Inclusion, (2005–2015)	Strives to improve access to and the quality of social services for Roma communities.(38) Objectives include monitoring cases of child labor exploitation in the Roma community, establishing shelters and day schools for street children, and improving birth registration and access to education for Roma children.(39)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Albania funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Program	Description
Help for Families and Children in Street Situations Action Plan†	Program jointly implemented by the Ministry of Social Welfare and Youth and Ministry of Interior to provide social services directly to street children. Teams of social workers and police officers identify child beggars and work with parents to remove children from the street.(6) Since the June 2014 launch of the pilot phase in Tirana, the program has identified 152 street children, removed 52 children from the street, and helped 27 families access social services.(6) Forty-five children were enrolled in and began attending school, and 11 children received accommodations in social care institutions at the request of their parents or after removal from exploitative situations.(18) The Government plans to expand the program from the capital into the regions.(12) The pilot phase in 2014 was donor funded.(6)
National Anti-Trafficking Week†‡	ONAC-funded program to provide a week of events to raise awareness of human trafficking. Included awareness activities with elementary schools and community centers, as well as conferences, television appearances by the National Coordinator, and television, billboard, and digital advertisements.(18)
Trafficking in Persons Helpline and Report and Save Mobile App†	ONAC projects, supported by USAID, UNODC, World Vision, and the Vodafone Albania Foundation, to provide services for victims of crime and improve prevention of trafficking in persons. Includes a national hotline for trafficking in persons victims and the mobile application "Report and Save," which allows citizens to report suspected trafficking cases, raises public awareness, and provides access to information on victim assistance.(18) In 2014, 765 calls were made to the national hotline, of which 39 were registered by the police as reported trafficking cases, and 590 messages were sent through the mobile app.(18)
Albania-UN Program of Cooperation (2012–2016)	UN program focuses on four thematic areas within the Government and civil society: governance and rule of law, economy and environment, regional and local development, and inclusive social policy.(41) Includes goals such as increased access to education for vulnerable children and increased protections for victims of child trafficking.(42)
National Emergency Transition Center	Government-run center established to provide vulnerable families with temporary housing, health, psychosocial and educational services, legal assistance, vocational education programs, and employment placement assistance. Currently houses 53 Roma families, including 112 children.(6) Beneficiaries include children at risk of street begging. To receive benefits, families must keep their children enrolled in school. (4) In 2014, the Government did not provide funding for the center; however, a decision was issued during the reporting period institutionalizing the Center's services and allocating a public budget for the Center for 2015.(6)
National Reception Center for Victims of Trafficking‡	Government-funded, high-security national shelter under the supervision of the Directorate General of State Social Service. Provides shelter and access to social services for human trafficking victims identified in Albania.(43)
Child Allowance Program (Ndihmja Ekonomike)*‡	$46 million government-funded cash transfer program that provides a child allowance for families already benefiting from economic aid through Albania's Law on Social Assistance and Services.(6) Although an annual $35 bonus for families who send their children to school and follow the state's vaccination program was established in 2014, child allowance payments to eligible families are still deemed too low to significantly reduce the number of children living in poverty, and therefore are unlikely to have an impact on reducing child labor.(6)
Decent Work Country Program (2012–2015)	ILO technical assistance project detailing the policies, strategies, and results required to realize progress toward the goal of decent work for all. Outcomes include strengthening the effectiveness and quality of labor inspection systems, enhancing the capacity of policymakers to address informal and vulnerable employment of young people, and ensuring that labor laws better adhere to international labor standards, including those on the worst forms of child labor.(44)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

Civil society organizations, rather than government organizations, generally provide social services for children engaged in the worst forms of child labor. These civil society organizations often lack well-trained staff and coordination with other protection services, especially at the local level.(4, 35, 45, 46) A source reported that the National Reception Center for Victims of Trafficking lacked proper resources for victim reintegration services such as education, psychological support, and vocational training. In addition, the Government did not provide sufficient financial assistance to the NGO-run shelters in Albania.(18) The only residential shelter specialized in aiding victims of child trafficking closed most of its services for several months due to lack of funding.(18)

Although Albania has implemented programs to assist street children and victims of child trafficking, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children in agriculture, construction, and mining, or children used in illicit activities.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Albania (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Define permissible work, including hours and conditions thereof, for children between the ages of 14 and 16 years.	2011 – 2014
Enforcement	Provide inspectors with adequate training and the tools needed to carry out their tasks effectively.	2010 – 2014
	Increase the number of child labor inspections to fully address the scope of the child labor problem.	2014
	Establish a referral mechanism between the SLI and providers of social services to ensure that all children found in situations of child labor receive access to needed services.	2014
	Ensure there are an adequate number, nationwide, of police investigators for child rights and that an adequate number of investigations are carried out.	2013 – 2014
	Fully enforce the provisions of the Criminal Code that prohibit the production and possession of child pornography.	2014
	Provide CRUs and CPUs with adequate funding to carry out their work effectively.	2013 – 2014
Social Programs	Conduct research on children working in agriculture and construction to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Increase resources, access to civil registration, and the number of social services available to children, including Roma and Egyptian children, engaged in or at risk of engaging in child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure that financial barriers to education, such as the prohibitive cost of school supplies and classroom resources, are removed for families in need.	2013 – 2014
	Increase payments to families who are eligible for assistance under the Social Assistance and Services Law.	2011 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture, construction, and mining, and to assist children being used in illicit activities.	2014

In 2014, Algeria made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved an amendment to the Penal Code that fully prohibits child pornography, and funded awareness campaigns to sensitize the population on child labor. However, children in Algeria are engaged in child labor, including in street work and domestic work. Algerian law does not clearly establish 18 as the minimum age for hazardous work, and prohibitions against hazardous occupations and activities are not specific enough to facilitate enforcement. The law does not prohibit the use of children in illicit activities and the Government does not make data on law enforcement efforts publicly available.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Algeria are engaged in child labor, including in street work and domestic work. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Algeria. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1-4)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (2, 3, 8)
Services	Street work, including vending, collecting plastics, and begging (1, 2, 5, 9, 10)
	Domestic work (1-4)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Working in small workshops, including mechanics shops* (11)
	Commercial sexual exploitation,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (12, 13)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Evidence suggests that children, primarily sub-Saharan migrants, are trafficked into prostitution in bars and informal brothels (12, 14)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Algeria has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Algeria

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 15 of the Labor Code (15)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	16	Article 15 of the Labor Code (15)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 15 of the Labor Code (15)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 303 of the Penal Code (16)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 303 and 319 of the Penal Code (16, 17)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 319, 333, 343, and 344 of the Penal Code (17, 18)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	19	Article 3 of Law No. 14-06 (19)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	17	Presidential Decree No. 08-134 (20, 21)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 12 of Law No. 08-04 (22)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 13 of Law No. 08-04 (22)

The Labor Code prohibits children younger than age 16 from being employed in work harmful to their health, safety, or morals. (15) However, this prohibition on hazardous occupations or activities is not specific enough to facilitate enforcement because it does not include a list of prohibited types of work. Furthermore, the Labor Code does not protect children age 16 and 17 from hazardous work. (15, 23)

In February 2014, the Government adopted a new law to amend and supplement the Penal Code. The amendment fully prohibits child pornography and criminalizes the buying and selling of minors under age 18. (17, 24)

Research found no indication that Algerian law prohibits the use of children in illegal activities. (25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security's General Labor Inspectorate	Investigate labor violations, including those involving child labor; authorized to hand out written notices and issue tickets. (2, 11, 26) Demand that safety and health problems be addressed if workers' health and safety are at risk. (26)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Interior's National Police	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor violations, including child trafficking.(2)
Ministry of Defense's Gendarmerie Police Force	Enforce criminal laws related to child labor violations, including child trafficking.(2)
Ministry of Justice's Office of Criminal Affairs and Amnesty Procedures	Prosecute child exploitation cases, including noncompliance with labor laws.(24)

Law enforcement agencies in Algeria took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, there were 27 Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security inspection offices throughout the country. Some cover one governorate (wilaya), while others cover more than one.(2, 11) According to the Government, the Labor Inspectorate had more than 600 operational inspectors as of February 2014.(11) There are more inspectors in urban areas than in rural areas, although past reports indicate higher levels of child labor in rural areas.(11, 27) According to the Government, General Labor Inspectorate officials received training on laws and law enforcement during the reporting period.(24)

The Government indicated that inspections were carried out during 2014, but this information is not publicly available.(24) Therefore, no information is available on the number or quality of inspections, whether they are announced or unannounced, child labor violations found, and citations or penalties issued. Labor inspectors are authorized to conduct regular inspections or special visits to investigate general labor conditions or a specific issue.(24, 26) The Gendarmerie and Police both have hotlines to receive complaints on child labor; however, research did not find the number of complaints related to child labor that were received during the reporting period.(9)

Labor inspectors share child labor reports with the Ministry of Solidarity to ensure follow-up with social welfare services.(9)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Government of Algeria did not make information publicly available on the number of investigators responsible for enforcing laws on the worst forms of child labor. Approximately 25 Gendarmerie officers, 25 National Police officers, and 25 Ministry of Justice prosecutors and judges attended three, week-long training sessions on issues related to human trafficking. The training focused on the links and differences between exploitation and trafficking, as well as the fact that trafficking is not necessarily transnational.(13)

The Government of Algeria did not make information publicly available on the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions pertaining to the worst forms of child labor.(24)

The Government does not have a formal procedure to refer victims identified by the Gendarmerie and the National Police to the appropriate social welfare services within the Ministry of Solidarity.(13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Intersectoral Commission Relative to the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor	Work to prevent and eliminate child labor by coordinating between government ministries and all other agencies that oversee labor activities.(2, 24) Led by the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security, with members from the National Labor Union, NGOs, and the Ministries of Agriculture; Rural Development; Health; Interior; Justice; Youth and Sports; National Solidarity; National Education, Training, and Professional Teaching; and Communication and Culture.(24, 28)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Coordinating Committee on Trafficking	Manage government efforts to address human trafficking. Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs' Director General for Political Affairs and International Security.(2, 29) Members of the committee include representatives from the Gendarmerie and the National Police, as well as of the Ministries of Justice; Health; Labor, Employment, and Social Security; and National Solidarity.(30)

In 2014, both the Intersectoral Commission and the Inter-Ministerial Coordinating Committee met monthly.(9) Although past reports indicate that the Intersectoral Commission organized hundreds of open-door seminars on child labor and education programs, and strengthened the labor inspection services, research found no evidence of such activities during 2014.(31)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Algeria has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Children (2008–2015)	Promotes universal access to education and child protection, including a section on child labor.(1, 23)

As of June 2012, the Government had not met its timetable for reporting on the implementation of the National Action Plan for Children. Research found that a lack of funding and technical capacity hinders the policy's implementation.(1)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Algeria funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Combating Child Domestic Labor in Africa and in the Countries of the Mediterranean Union	$1.3 million, Government of France-funded, 4-year regional project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child domestic work.(32)
Strengthening the Framework of the Arab Region to Prevent and Combat Human Trafficking	$650,000 EU-funded, 3-year regional project to strengthen the capacity of Algeria and other Arab governments to address human trafficking. Trained judges and criminal law enforcement officials on human trafficking issues in 2014.(11, 13, 33)
Child Labor Awareness Campaigns†‡	Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Welfare and Ministry of Education nationwide program that highlights issues involving child labor and sensitized the population against such practices through 3-day awareness campaigns at vocational training centers.(24)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Algeria.

Although the Government of Algeria has implemented programs in domestic work and human trafficking, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children in agriculture, construction, and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Algeria (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish the minimum age for hazardous work as 18 and ensure that hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for children are specific enough to facilitate enforcement.	2009 – 2014
	Prohibit the use of children in illicit activities.	2013 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure that child labor laws are enforced effectively in all geographic areas.	2009 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Make information regarding child labor law enforcement, including criminal law enforcement, publicly available.	2009 – 2014
	Disaggregate the number of child labor-related complaints received by the Gendarmerie and Police hotlines.	2014
	Establish a formal referral mechanism between criminal law enforcement agencies and social welfare services.	2014
Coordination	Ensure that the Intersectoral Commission Relative to the Prevention of and Fight Against Child Labor remains active to guarantee proper coordination.	2011 – 2014
Government Policies	Report on the progress of the National Action Plan for Children according to the agreed-upon timetable, and provide adequate funding and capacity building to ensure that objectives are met.	2011 – 2014
Social Programs	Conduct research on the prevalence and nature of child labor to publicly inform policies and programs.	2014
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture, construction, and street work.	2009 – 2014

Angola

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Angola made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government acceded to the Palermo Protocol, passed a new law protecting all children from human trafficking for sexual and economic exploitation, established a Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons, and trained criminal law enforcement officials. However, children in Angola are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and mining. There are gaps in the legal framework to protect children from exploitation, including a lack of prohibitions on the use of children in illicit activities. Additionally, there is little publicly available information on the Government's efforts to enforce laws on child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Angola are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and mining. (1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Angola.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	25.7 (694,458)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	65.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	22.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		54.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 2, 2001.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and picking tomatoes,* production of rice* (1-5)
	Fishing,* animal herding* (1, 6)
Industry	Artisanal diamond mining (1, 7)
	Mining coal* (3)
	Construction,* making and transporting bricks* (1-3, 6, 10, 11)
Services	Street work, including vending, car washing, and shoe shining* (1, 3, 6, 11-14)
	Transporting heavy loads (1, 3, 6)
	Domestic work (1, 6)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 6, 12)
	Work in agriculture,* construction,* and domestic work,* each as a result of human trafficking (2, 15, 16)
	Forced labor in artisanal diamond mining* (2)
	Used in illicit activities, including drug trafficking, moving illicit goods across the border of Angola and Namibia, and working as thieves in criminal gangs (2, 6, 14, 16)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Although the Government collected general information on the prevalence of child labor in its 2008–2009 national well-being survey, it has not conducted in-depth research on the worst forms of child labor.(17)

Angolan children are trafficked within the country and internationally for domestic servitude and commercial sexual exploitation.(2) There is evidence of girls as young as age 13 in commercial sexual exploitation.(2) Limited evidence suggests that Congolese migrant children enter Angola for work in diamond-mining districts where they experience conditions of forced labor or commercial sexual exploitation in mining camps.(1, 2) Additionally, human trafficking networks recruit and transport Congolese girls as young as age 12 from the Kasai Occidental province in the Democratic Republic of Congo to Angola for various forms of exploitation.(2)

There is a low rate of birth registration in Angola due to high costs, great distances to service centers, and parents who lack documentation.(18) Registration is necessary to enroll in school and access social services.(19) Additional barriers to education include a lack of school infrastructure, teaching materials, and qualified teachers.(14, 18, 20)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Angola has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In 2014, Angola ratified the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.(21)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 282 of the Labor Law (22)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 284 of the Labor Law (22, 23)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Joint Executive Decree No. 171/10 (24)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 60 of the Constitution of Angola; Article 18 of Law No. 3/14 (25, 26)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 19 and 23 of Law No. 3/14; Article 165 of the Penal Code (26, 27)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 22 and 23 of Law No. 3/14; Articles 182-184 of the Penal Code (26-29)

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Article 17 of the Basic Law of the Education System (8, 32)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 7 of the Basic Law of the Education System (32)

Angola

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, the Government passed the Law on the Criminalization of Infractions Surrounding Money Laundering, Law No. 3/14, which protects all children less than 18 years old from human trafficking and forced labor.(26) The new law also penalizes employers or labor agents who confiscate, hide, damage, or destroy workers' identity documents. The penalty for labor or sex trafficking, including acting as an agent of a trafficker, is 8 to 12 years in prison; custodial adults who are complicit in child trafficking may be subject to 2 to 8 years in prison.(26)

The Government's list of hazardous work, established by Joint Executive Decree No. 171/10, prohibits activities for minors including fireworks production, stone mining, animal slaughter, leather production, paper making, and pornography.(24, 33) However, the hazardous work list does not cover all hazardous activities in which Angolan children are involved, including high-seas fishing, diamond mining, informal market vending, and in street work.(34)

The Penal Code protects children under age 16 from child pornography, but this protection does not extend to age 18, and there are no provisions against possession of child pornography.(27)

While Law No. 3/99 contains provisions prohibiting the use of children in drug trafficking, and article 157 of the Penal Code prohibits a child's custodian from employing the child in prohibited activities, research found no law that generally prohibits the use of children in all illicit activities.(27, 30)

The law establishes that primary education is compulsory for 6 years.(32) The Government reported to the UNESCO Institute of Statistics that children begin primary education at 6 years old, making education compulsory until age 12.(8) Ending compulsory education at 12 years of age makes children ages 12 through 14 vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to attend school but are not legally permitted to work either. In addition, this age conflicts with the National Development Plan (2013–2017), which sets the age for compulsory education at 14.(11)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Public Administration, Labor, and Social Security (MAPTSS)	Inspect workplaces and identify children who are employed in the formal sector. MAPTSS can fine an employer, or send the case to the Ministry of Interior for further investigation and the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights for prosecution.(6, 28) Employ labor inspectors in all 18 provinces to carry out inspections and joint operations with tax authorities and social service providers.(28)
National Children's Institute (INAC)	Receive complaints about cases of child abuse, including child labor, through its research and investigation branch. INAC's inspection teams conduct regular oversight missions in collaboration with various ministries, the ILO, and civil society.(28, 30)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, including the Attorney General's Office and Court for Minors	Prosecute child labor cases, including the worst forms of child labor.(28) The Court for Minors handles protective proceedings where a child has been the victim of abuse, exploitation, or neglect.(35)
Ministry of the Interior and its agencies, including the National Police, Border Police, and Immigration Services	Enforce criminal laws and conduct operations and investigations related to forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 11, 30)

Law enforcement agencies in Angola took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, Angola employed 187 labor inspectors. According to the Government, the number of inspectors is insufficient to effectively monitor the labor market.(1) Inspectors, especially those outside of Luanda, lack necessary resources and sufficient training to carry out their work.(1)

The National Children's Institute (INAC) collects information from the provinces on the number of child labor cases; however, no information is available regarding child labor inspections, violations, citations, and penalties.(11, 16)

MAPTSS inspectors work with INAC and the Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS) to ensure that victims of child labor receive the appropriate social services.(30)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on the number of investigators responsible for investigating cases of the worst forms of child labor. According to the Government, 240 Angolan officials were trained on the new anti-trafficking in persons legislation during the reporting period.(11)

In 2014, an Angolan national acquired a child in Huila province, intending to take her to the Democratic Republic of Congo to sell her as a sex slave.(36, 37) Police authorities apprehended the perpetrator in Cabinda province and the victim received assistance from social services.(37) In addition, a National Police investigation resulted in the arrest of two Angolan citizens for facilitating the transport and delivery of two children to France. The Attorney General's Office is investigating the case in preparation for prosecution.(16, 36) Research did not find further information regarding investigations, prosecutions, and convictions.

The National Police and Immigration Services refer victims of the worst forms of child labor to INAC and MINARS to receive social services; victims of child trafficking are referred to INAC's Child Support Centers.(16, 30)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS)	Ensure coordination between various Government bodies related to social welfare and victim protection.(1, 38) MINARS has established institutions and a network of shelters to protect children from abusive, exploitative, and dangerous situations.(37)
National Children's Institute (INAC)	Coordinate Government child protection services. Work with MINARS to provide shelter and help reintegrate children found in child labor situations with their families.(28)
National Council of Children (CNAC)	Coordinate the Government's efforts on children's issues, including the worst forms of child labor. Led by MINARS and comprised of 17 ministries and related organizations, including the Ministries of Justice and Human Rights, Interior, MAPTSS, Education, Culture, as well as UNICEF, religious institutions, and civil society organizations.(1)
Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons*	Coordinate enforcement efforts on human trafficking, including child trafficking for labor and sexual exploitation. Composed of representatives from the Ministries of Justice and Human Rights, MINARS, MAPTSS, Interior, and relevant Government agencies including the Office of the Attorney General, Immigration Services, and the National Police.(11) Established in November 2014, the commission is currently working on a national strategy to combat human trafficking.(11)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

The process for selecting civil society members of the National Council of Children (CNAC) lacks transparency.(29)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Angola has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Community of Portuguese-Speaking Countries (CPLP) Action Plan to Combat Child Labor	Establishes four target areas to combat child labor: the exchange of information and experiences; awareness-raising campaigns; use of statistical methodologies to collect child labor data; and technical cooperation and training.(39-42) During the reporting period, the Government represented the CPLP at the 320th session of the Board of Directors of the International Labor Organization.(42)

Policy	Description
The Eleven Commitments for Angolan Children	Outlines the Government's main policies for protecting children's rights; goals include protecting children from exploitation and providing education to every child.(12, 43, 44) During the reporting period, the Government raised awareness on the importance of education, built or refurbished 293 schools in Zaire province, and increased the number of teachers in the country.(30, 45)
National Strategy to Prevent and Combat Violence Against Children	Guides the Government's efforts to address violence against children including physical and psychological violence, child labor, child trafficking, and sexual abuse.(12, 29)
Plan of Action and Intervention against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children (NPAI SCEC)	Aims to protect and defend the rights of child victims of sexual and economic exploitation, including the rehabilitation and social inclusion of the victims.(34)
Free birth registration and identification cards*	Makes birth registration free for all Angolan citizens until 2016. Allows parents to get Identity Cards for free so that they are able to register their children.(19)
Poverty Reduction Strategy (2005-2015)	Serves as the main policy document that guides the Government's anti-poverty actions. Supports the Millennium Development Goals and includes as its objectives poverty reduction, democratic governance, crisis prevention and recovery, environmental protection, and sustainable development.(46, 47)
National Development Plan* (2013-2017)	Guarantees nine years of compulsory, free education until age 14.(11)
National Action Plan for Education for All (2001-2015)*	Aims to achieve universal primary education by 2015.(12, 29)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The Government has indicated that the Plan of Action and Intervention against the Sexual and Commercial Exploitation of Children (NPAI SCEC) is unsuitable for the current context and that there is an urgent need to revise it. INAC is in the process of evaluating the NPAI SCEC's implementation, with the goal of strengthening the policy.(34)

Research found that a lack of human and financial resources has hindered progress toward targets of the Education for All Plan.(18)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Angola funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Program	Description
Mobile schools‡	Ministry of Education program that provides education in mobile schools to migrant children who work with their parents in herding cattle.(1) The program specifically targets children at the highest risk of involvement in child labor in southern Angola.(1) Some mobile schools also have kitchens, which facilitate in the Government's school meal program.(1, 48)
Microcredit project‡	MAPTSS program that provides cash assistance to parents so that their children do not need to work.(1)
National Institutes of Job and Professional Training *‡	Government-funded program of 555 centers that provide free, professional training for youth so that they have skills to enter the formal labor market.(1, 49) At least 27,019 young people were trained during the reporting period.(49)
Free meals for children*‡	Government program offering free meals for school children.(1, 28) One such program in Benguela, supported by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, NGOs, and the Government of Angola, is reported to have fed more than 220,000 school children. The Angolan Ministry of Education reports similar programs in the provinces of Lunda Norte and Lunda Sul.(28)
Child Support Centers‡	INAC oversees a national network of Child Support Centers in all 18 provinces that offer health care, psychological care, legal and social assistance, meals, basic education, and family reunification for crime victims, including human trafficking victims, under 18 years of age.(2, 16)
Children's shelters‡	The Ministry of Assistance and Social Reintegration (MINARS), the Ministry of Family and Women's Promotion (MINFAMU), and the Organization of Angolan Women operate 51 children's shelters for child trafficking victims.(2, 37)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Angola.

Although Angola has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Furthermore, research did not identify programs that target children engaged in certain worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation, illicit activities, or forced labor in agriculture, domestic work, or diamond mining.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Angola (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law prohibits hazardous occupations or activities for children in all relevant sectors in Angola, including work in high-seas fishing, diamond mining, informal market vending, and street work.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure that the legal framework protects all children under age 18 from child pornography and includes penalties for possession of child pornography.	2014
	Ensure that the legal framework prohibits the use of children in illicit activities, including thievery or illegal couriering.	2014
	Increase the compulsory education age to 14 to be consistent with the National Development Plan.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Strengthen the labor inspection system by increasing the number of labor inspectors, in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, and by providing all inspectors with adequate training and the appropriate resources.	2009 – 2014
	Collect child labor information from provincial agencies and make information on child labor inspections, citations, violations, and penalties publicly available.	2011 – 2014
	Make information publicly available regarding the number of law enforcement officials, investigations, prosecutions, and convictions of the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2014
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2014
	Release details on the selection process for civil society members of the CNAC.	2012 – 2014
Government Policies	Accelerate birth registration and identification processes to promote school enrollment and provide social services to vulnerable children.	2010 – 2014
	Use the results of the 2008-2009 national well-being survey to integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2009 – 2014
	Revise and strengthen the NPAI SCEC and ensure its effective implementation.	2014
	Allocate more Government resources to the Education for All Policy to ensure targets are met.	2014
Social Programs	Conduct research on the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Strengthen the education system by providing more funding, schools, and trained teachers.	2013 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Institute programs that target children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, illicit activities, and forced labor in agriculture, domestic work and diamond mining, and expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2014

In 2014, Argentina made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified ILO Convention 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers in its effort to ensure compulsory schooling and minimum age protections for young domestic workers. The Government's Provincial Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (COPRETI) provided key trainings to labor inspectors on child labor issues, and the Executive Council to Fight Human Trafficking provided additional training to officials on human trafficking issues. The National Registry of Agricultural Workers and Employers (RENATEA) also launched a program to lengthen the school day and create child care centers for children of agricultural laborers to reduce their vulnerability to child labor. However, children in Argentina are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Argentina has not adopted a list of hazardous occupations that are prohibited for children, and the country appears to lack programs that target working children in several key sectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Argentina are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-9) In 2012, the Government of Argentina began incorporating a child labor module into the Permanent Survey of Households. However, the survey does not fully encompass rural areas, leaving the prevalence of child labor in agricultural activities unknown.(10, 11) Preliminary results of the 2012 survey, which were released in 2013, indicated a decrease in child labor. However, the full results have not been made publicly available.(11, 12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Argentina.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.5 (395,869)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	98.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		109.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011-2012.(14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting bell peppers,* blueberries, carrots,* corn,* cotton, garlic, grapes, olives, onions,* potatoes,* strawberries, and tomatoes (9, 15-30)
	Harvesting yerba mate (3, 5, 26, 31-33)
	Harvesting tobacco (1, 6, 19)
Industry	Production of garments (34, 35)
	Production of bricks (17, 36, 37)
	Manufacturing aluminum pots* (38)
	Construction, activities unknown (17, 19, 39)
	Mining* (19)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street begging and performing, windshield-washing, automobile caretaking (12, 17, 40, 41)
	Refuse collection, recycling, and garbage scavenging (11, 17, 40-42)
	Domestic service (19, 40, 41, 43, 44)
	Transporting goods* (22)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 19, 40, 45)
	Forced labor in the production of garments (46-48)
	Used in the production of pornography* (7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children of Bolivian immigrants are engaged in child labor in agriculture and domestic service, and are engaged in forced child labor in the production of garments.(18, 30, 44, 48) While the extent of the problem is unknown, reports indicate that there has been an increase in the trafficking of Bolivian children to Argentina for labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(49, 50) Reports also indicate that Paraguayan children are trafficked to Argentina for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 45, 51, 52)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Argentina has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

During the reporting period, the Government ratified ILO Convention 189 Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers. (53) ILO Convention 189 requires signatories to specify a minimum age of employment for domestic workers, as well as ensure that work performed by domestic workers who are under the age of 18 and above the minimum age does not deprive them of compulsory education, or interfere with opportunities to participate in further education or vocational training. The Convention enters into force for Argentina in 2015.(54)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 2, 7, and 17 of the Prohibition of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Work Law (26.390); Article 9 of the Special Code on Contracting Domestic Workers (26.844); Article 1 of the Child Labor Law (26.847); Article 25 of the Child and Adolescent Rights Protection Law (26.061); Article 55 of the Law on Agrarian Work (26.727) (55-59)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 10 of the Prohibition of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Work Law (26.390); Articles 176 and 191 of the Law on Labor Contracts (20.744); Article 62 of the Law on Agrarian Work (26.727) (55, 59, 60)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 1 and 21-23 of the Modifications to the Prevention of and Sanction Against Trafficking in Persons and Assistance to Victims Law (26.842); Article 6 of the Crimes Against Sexual Integrity Law (25.087); Article 2 of the Modification to the Penal Code (Law 26.388) (62-64)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 11 of the Possession and Trafficking of Drugs Law (23.737) (65)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes*	18	Article 19 of the Voluntary Military Service Law (24.429) (66)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 8 of the Voluntary Military Service Law (24.429) (66)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Articles 16 and 29 of the National Education Law (26.206) (67, 68)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 15-16 of the Child and Adolescent Rights Protection Law (26.061) (57)

* No conscription in practice (69)

Argentina has not adopted a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children.(45) Article 2 of Law 26.388 (Modification to the Penal Code) prohibits the use of children in pornographic shows and in the production, publication, and distribution of child pornography.(64) However, Law 26.388 does not criminalize the possession of child pornography for personal use.(39)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS)	Enforce child labor laws, in part through its Coordinating Body for the Prevention of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (COODITIA), which trains inspectors in child labor and adolescent work issues. Oversee the Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI).(40, 70, 71) Oversee the National Registry of Agricultural Workers and Employers (RENATEA) which, through its own team of inspectors, assists in the enforcement of child labor laws in the agricultural sector.(12, 72)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Maintain a Tribunal for adjudicating disputes in domestic service work and telephone lines for reporting cases of child labor and forced labor.(73)
Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims	Provide emergency legal and other assistance to victims of labor and sex trafficking, including child victims. Part of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights.(41, 74, 75)
Public Prosecutor's Anti-Trafficking Division (PROTEX)	Prosecute crimes of trafficking in persons for labor and commercial sexual exploitation, instruct federal personnel in the investigation of trafficking, and design criminal policy in trafficking.(76-78)
National Immigration Directorate	Direct the National Immigration Police, oversee the rights of migrants, and assist in investigating cases of international trafficking.(18, 79)
Federal Police	Conduct trafficking investigations through its Trafficking in Persons Division.(35)
Federal Administration of Public Revenue (AFIP)	Ensure employer compliance with national laws, assist in workplace and labor-related inspections, and initiate prosecutions of labor violations through the Penal Section of its Social Security Directorate.(35, 80, 81)

Argentina

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Law enforcement agencies in Argentina took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Social Security (MTESS) employed 566 labor inspectors, which is 19 inspectors more than the MTESS employed in 2013.(12, 82) The National Registry of Agricultural Workers and Employers (RENATEA), which assists the MTESS in the enforcement of labor laws in the agricultural sector, reported employing 50 labor inspectors.(12, 83) Although research could not determine whether all 566 MTESS inspectors received training in child labor issues in 2014, the MTESS's Coordinating Body for the Prevention of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (COODITIA) conducted numerous trainings on child labor and adolescent work for labor inspectors and government officials located around the country.(71) In addition, RENATEA reported that it provided 10 training sessions to its inspectors on identifying and reporting hazardous child labor in the agricultural sector.(12, 83) The budget for the MTESS in 2014 was approximately $8.7 billion.(12)

Although some information on specific MTESS inspection efforts was publicly available for 2014, research could not identify the total number of labor inspections conducted by the MTESS during the reporting period.(12, 84) Information on the specific sectors and geographic localities in which MTESS inspections were carried out, as well as on the total number of children removed from child labor, was also not publicly available.(12) RENATEA conducted 865 labor inspections in the agricultural sector in 2014. These inspections were conducted in approximately half of Argentina's 23 provinces where agricultural labor is prevalent. Inspections were conducted in operations involving the production of potatoes, tomatoes, grapes, tobacco, cotton, and yerba mate, among others; inspections were also conducted on livestock-raising undertakings.(83) Through these inspections, RENATEA identified 50 children engaged in child labor.(83) RENATEA reported that its inspectors refer children rescued from child labor to the COODITIA for the provision of services and the initiation of legal action against the employer; however, research could not identify whether the 50 children RENATEA rescued in 2014 were referred to the COODITIA. Research could also not find information on whether the MTESS inspectors followed this referral process during the reporting period, or on the number of children who received these referrals.(12) Information on the number of fines issued or penalties assessed for child labor violations was not publicly available.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the number of investigators from the Public Prosecutor's Anti-Trafficking Division (PROTEX), the Federal Police, or other criminal law enforcement agencies dedicated to investigating the worst forms of child labor was not known. Although PROTEX investigators led and participated in trainings on human trafficking, research could not determine the extent to which these trainings addressed the worst forms of child labor, including child commercial sexual exploitation, forced child labor, or the use of children in illicit activities. Research could also not determine whether agencies engaged in enforcing criminal laws related to child labor had sufficient resources to carry out their duties.

PROTEX reported that it initiated 286 investigations for crimes of human trafficking in 2014. It pursued 139 cases related to commercial sexual exploitation and 59 cases related to labor exploitation.(85) Although these cases were not disaggregated to differentiate between adult and child exploitation, PROTEX reported that 9 percent of the victims were children. PROTEX also reported that, in 2014, there were 22 prosecutions for sex trafficking that involved 5 minors, and 11 prosecutions for labor trafficking that involved 11 minors.(85) In 2014, PROTEX reported that there were 24 sentences issued, with 37 individuals convicted of sex trafficking, and 18 individuals convicted of labor trafficking. Sentences for sex trafficking ranged from 1 to 14 years of imprisonment, and sentences for labor trafficking ranged from 2 to 6 years of imprisonment.(85) Research did not identify how many of these sentences were issued for trafficking crimes involving minors.

The Office for the Rescue and Care of Trafficking Victims and the National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNAF) provide legal and other assistance to trafficking survivors. However, research could not determine the number of child trafficking victims who received these services during the reporting period.(49)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI)	Coordinate efforts to monitor and eradicate child labor at the national level and implement Argentina's National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor.(40, 86-89) Composed of the MTESS, the Ministry of Social Development, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the Ministry of Security, the Ministry of the Interior, and the Ministry of Health. Includes representatives from the Argentine Industrial Union, the General Confederation of Labor, and the National Secretariat of the Argentine Episcopal Conference.(40) UNICEF and IPEC also provide advisors. Overseen by the MTESS.(40)
Provincial Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (COPRETI)	Coordinate efforts, with oversight by CONAETI, to prevent and eradicate child labor at the provincial level.(40, 87, 90). Composed of representatives of governmental and nongovernmental institutions, labor unions, and religious institutions. There are 23 COPRETI.(40, 87, 90)
National Secretariat for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family (SENNAF)	Establish, through its Childhood and Adolescence Protectorate, public policies to secure rights of children and adolescents; coordinate child protection efforts with other government ministries and entities of civil society; and provide assistance to trafficking victims. Overseen by the Ministry of Social Development.(91)
Federal Council for Childhood, Adolescence, and Family	Uphold rights of children and adolescents; deliberate on, assess, and plan public policies on child and adolescent rights; and secure the transfer of federal monies to fund provincial programs. Composed of representatives from national and provincial agencies that coordinate with the SENNAF and formed through the Ministry of Social Development.(92)
Child and Adolescent Labor Monitoring Office (OTIA)	Conduct qualitative and quantitative research on child and adolescent labor to provide policy analysis and inform programming to eradicate child labor and regulate adolescent labor. Created through the Undersecretariat of Technical Programming and Labor Studies of the MTESS.(87, 93)
Coordinating Unit for Children and Adolescents in Danger of Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Provide guidance to relevant institutions, run workshops and research programs regarding commercial sexual exploitation, and assist children, adolescents, and their families. Formed within the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights.(94)
Network of Businesses Against Child Labor	Develop initiatives to sensitize stakeholders to issues of child labor and programs to prevent and eradicate child labor. Developed through a partnership between the MTESS, CONAETI, and the businesses that comprise it.(86, 95)
Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (CDNNyA)	Develop programs and policies on child labor and the sexual exploitation of children for the City of Buenos Aires.(40, 96)
Executive Council to Fight Human Trafficking and Exploitation and to Protect and Assist Victims	Coordinate executive branch efforts to combat human trafficking. Composed of representatives of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, the Ministry of Security, and the MTESS.(49)

In July 2014, the National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI) convened the 23 Provincial Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (COPRETI) to provide training on how the labor inspection process is integral to the protection of children's rights.(71) The COPRETI of Salta, Jujuy, Mendoza and San Luis also held separate programs on child labor issues for regional labor inspectors and government officials.(71)

Also during the reporting period, the Executive Council to Fight Human Trafficking and Exploitation and to Protect and Assist Victims reported hosting 92 trafficking seminars for government officials and representatives from civil society in 19 provinces. A total of 5,210 attendees participated in the sessions.(49)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Argentina has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Regulation of Adolescent Work (2011-2015)	Calls for actions to address child labor and regulate adolescent work, including awareness-raising, inter-institutional collaboration, stronger inspection mechanisms, and programming in rural and urban settings. Implemented by CONAETI and seeks to mainstream child labor issues into labor and health policies.(88, 97, 98)
National Action Plan for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (2012-2015)	Promotes the dignity and rights of children and adolescents in Argentina. Objectives include preventing and eliminating child labor, including its worst forms.(99)

Argentina

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Policy	Description
Third Program for Decent Work for Argentina (2012-2015)	Pursues a decent work and social well-being agenda in the context of Argentina's Millennium Development Goals (2003-2015) and in consultation with the ILO. Social and economic objectives include the prevention and eradication of child labor.(11, 100)
MERCOSUR United Against Child Labor Campaign	Develops public awareness about the need to combat child labor in MERCOSUR. Addresses child labor in agriculture, domestic work, and sexual exploitation, with particular emphasis on communities along country borders.(101)
Second Presidential Declaration on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor in MERCOSUR (2012)	Promotes greater articulation between governmental agencies, levels of government, and with civil society among MERCOSUR members.(100)
MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Aims to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states regarding the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking and pornography, child labor, and migrant labor; by improving country legal frameworks to harmonize them with international conventions affecting children; and by exchanging best practices.(102)
Regional Plan for Adolescent Work (2011)	Promotes decent work for adolescent workers. Articulated within MERCOSUR's Strategy for Employment Growth.(100)
Fight against Human Trafficking Agreement between the Government of Colombia and the Government of Argentina†	Establishes a work plan to prevent, identify, and collaborate in the fight against human trafficking between the Government of Colombia and the Government of Argentina. Agreement signed in Argentina in July 2014; aims to strengthen efforts to assist Colombian victims of human trafficking found in forced labor in Argentina.(103)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014 – 2020)†	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Argentina at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(104-106)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In September 2014, Argentina participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. Held in Bridgetown, Barbados, these discussions promoted the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector, uphold workers' rights, and prevent and eliminate child labor.(107, 108)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Argentina funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Program	Description
Universal Child Allowance Program (Asignación Universal)*‡	Government of Argentina program funded in part by the World Bank that provides a monthly cash transfer to unemployed parents and workers in the informal economy, contingent upon parents' fulfillment of health and education requirements for their children.(11, 109, 110) Includes pregnant women and currently covers 3.5 million children under age 18.(11)
RENATEA Awareness-Raising Campaigns‡	RENATEA campaigns that raise awareness of child labor in agriculture and inform families and children of the right to education.(83, 111)
CONAETI Awareness-Raising Campaigns	CONAETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor campaigns that make businesses and the general public aware of child labor in sourcing and supply chains.(95)
Harvest Day Care and Future Programs (Jardines de Cosecha y Porvenir)	COPRETI/Network of Businesses Against Child Labor programs that aim to reduce child labor in the production of crops, such as tobacco and blueberries, where labor is often performed by entire families. Children are placed in day care centers that have educational and recreational programs.(15, 112-116)
Care Program's Extended School Day/ Child Care Centers (Programa Cuidar)†‡	RENATEA program to lengthen the school day and create child care centers in agricultural regions designed to reduce children's vulnerability to child labor in the agricultural sector.(12, 117)

Program	Description
Heads of Household Program (Programa Jefes de Hogar)*‡	MTESS program that seeks to improve the employability of families who have experienced economic hardship. (118)
UNICEF Argentina's Program for the Protection of Children's Rights	Works to protect children from child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, violence, and abuse. Fosters the development of protection systems and dialogue between civil society and local, provincial, and federal state agencies. Priority areas for 2011-2014 concern indigenous and immigrant children and the urban poor.(119)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(120-122)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Argentina.(123)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including Argentina. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(123)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Argentina.

During the reporting period, Argentina continued to implement social programs designed to combat child labor.(12) However, programs that address child labor in agriculture do not address the scope of the problem in the sector; research also did not find programs that specifically targeted children working in urban activities, such as refuse collection or street begging and performing.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Argentina (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Adopt a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children.	2009 – 2014
	Criminalize the possession of child pornography.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on MTESS child labor enforcement efforts, including the number of labor inspections, the sectors and geographic localities in which inspections are carried out, and the sanctions imposed as a result.	2009 – 2014
	Publicly report on the total number of children removed from child labor, including its worst forms, as well as on the number of children who received services, including the agencies that refer and receive child labor victims.	2014
	Publicly report on the number of criminal investigators who investigate child labor-related crimes and ensure that they have training and adequate resources to enforce laws on the worst forms of child labor.	2014
Social Programs	Fully incorporate rural areas into the Permanent Survey of Households and make findings on child labor publicly available.	2013 – 2014
	Assess the impact that social programs, especially cash transfer programs, may have on reducing the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Expand programs that target child labor in agricultural activities.	2012 – 2014
	Develop specific programs that target child labor in informal urban activities, such as refuse collection or street begging and performing.	2009 – 2014

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Armenia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Armenia has received an assessment of minimal advancement because the Government lacks a labor inspectorate to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws. This gap in enforcement delays the advancements made in eliminating child labor during the reporting period. In addition, the Government lacks a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address all forms of child labor, including its worst forms, and no programs exist to aid children engaged in work activities on the street or in agriculture. Children in Armenia continue to engage in child labor in the services sector. Despite these gaps, the Government did make efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor, including enacting legislation to improve the identification of and provision of services to victims of human trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, evidence suggests that children are engaged in child labor in the services sector.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Armenia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	8.1 (30,494)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	89.8
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	9.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		100.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2008, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2010.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including planting and harvesting potatoes* (1, 3-5, 8, 9)
	Herding livestock* (4, 5, 10)
Industry	Construction,* activities unknown (1, 8, 11)
Services	Washing cars* (1, 3, 4)
	Street work, including gathering scrap metals* and begging (1, 2, 4, 5, 9, 11, 12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 8, 13-15)
	Forced begging sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 8, 14)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Although Article 39 of the Constitution of Armenia and Article 6 of the Law of Republic of Armenia on Education guarantee free universal education, children from low-income families and from families belonging to ethnic minorities continue to have reduced access to education.(16, 17) In addition, children with disabilities also face difficulty accessing mainstream education due to the inaccessibility of the physical infrastructure of schools, a lack of individual education planning and methodologies, a lack of community-based support services for the child and the family, and a general social stigma against individuals with disabilities. (16-18) As a result of these barriers, a source reports that over 70 percent of children with disabilities in the care of the state and almost 20 percent of children with disabilities in the care of their families do not attend school.(19)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Armenia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 15 and 17 of the Labor Code; Article 32 of the Constitution of the Republic of Armenia (20, 21)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 257 of the Labor Code (20)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		List of Work Categories Considered Excessive or Harmful for Persons Under the Age of 18, Women Who are Pregnant, and Women Caring for Infants Under the Age of One Year (22)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 32 of the Constitution of the Republic of Armenia; Article 3 of the Labor Code; Article 132 of the Republic of Armenia Criminal Code (20, 21, 23, 24)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 132, 132.2, and 168 of the Republic of Armenia Criminal Code (23, 25)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 132, 166, and 261-263 of the Republic of Armenia Criminal Code (23-25)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 165 and 166.1 of the Republic of Armenia Criminal Code (23-25)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 5 of the Law on Mandatory Military Service (25, 26)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 18 of the Law of the Republic of Armenia on Education (25, 27)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 39 of the Constitution of the Republic of Armenia; Article 6 of the Law of the Republic of Armenia on Education (21)

The minimum age for work is 16. If children ages 14 to 15 obtain the written consent of a parent or a guardian, they may work restricted hours as specified by the labor code; however, Armenia does not specify the type of light work in which they may engage. (20, 28)

In December 2014, the Government passed the Law on Identification and Assistance of Victims of Trafficking and Exploitation, which will replace the National Referral Mechanism when it comes into force in June 2015. This law aims to improve the identification of and provision of services to victims of human trafficking, including child trafficking, by removing the necessity for victims to cooperate with law enforcement in order to receive assistance.(15, 29)

Also in December 2014, the Government passed an amendment to the Law of the Republic of Armenia on General Education that guarantees inclusive education, improves education standards, and defines respective support services for children with special education needs and children with disabilities.(10, 18, 30)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
State Health Inspectorate (SHI)*	Enforce labor laws and impose sanctions for violations.(31)
Main Department on Especially Serious Crimes within the Investigative Committee*	Investigate cases of child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children referred to the Investigative Committee by the Police.(29, 32)
Department on Defending the Rights of Minors and Combating Domestic Violence within the Police	Identify and conduct preliminary investigation of crimes in which children are victims or perpetrators. (13, 32) Enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor under the General Department of Criminal Intelligence.(25, 29, 32) Refer identified crimes to the Investigative Committee for further investigation. (32)
Anti-Trafficking Unit within the Police	Identify and conduct preliminary investigation of crimes related to child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children through a staff of seven field officers. Operate within the Department of Combating High-Tech related (Cyber) Crimes, Human Trafficking, Illegal Migration, and Terrorism of the General Department on Combating Organized Crime.(33) Refer identified crimes to the Investigative Committee for further investigation.(32)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

Law enforcement agencies in Armenia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, there were 60 labor inspectors located in the State Health Inspectorate (SHI).(34) In July 2013, the Government had adopted Decree #857-N that created the new SHI under the Ministry of Health to take over the combined inspection functions of the former State Labor Inspectorate under the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA) and the former State Hygiene and Anti-Epidemic Inspectorate under the Ministry of Health.(33) As part of the 2013 restructuring, the number of labor inspectors was reduced from 146 to 60, which the SHI reports was insufficient to fully enforce labor laws. The 20 inspectors based at the SHI headquarters are civil servants, while the remaining 40 are contractors, who do not receive the same training as the civil servants.(34) In addition, in 2014 the SHI lacked sufficient funding, work space, computers, and transportation to effectively enforce labor laws. SHI officials reported that inspectors are often required to walk to inspection sites in order to perform inspections due to lack of transportation.(34) As a result, inspectors were not able to conduct a sufficient number of inspections in 2014. Inspectors were also unable to conduct unannounced inspections.(34)

In 2014, the SHI conducted 48 inspections and discovered 2 violations of laws related to child labor. After an administrative review, these employers were issued administrative penalties and given mandatory requirements to eliminate their child labor law violations. (35) While inspectors do not have the right to issue penalties for violations discovered during the course of investigations, the head of the SHI does have the power to review cases of violations and issue administrative penalties.(35) However, a source indicated that penalties for violations of labor laws were insufficient to deter violations.(36)

In addition, in January 2015, the Government enacted legislation that amended the Labor Code to remove the SHI's mandate to conduct labor inspection.(34) The SHI is restricted to conducting inspections based on complaints only related to occupational safety and health violations.(37) As a result, the SHI reports that there is now no monitoring or enforcement of child labor laws in Armenia.(34)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In June 2014, the Investigation Department within the Police was merged with the Investigative Department of the Ministry of Defense to create a new autonomous body called the Investigative Committee.(29) As a result of the reorganization, functions formerly carried out by the Unit to Investigate Human Trafficking, Illegal Drug Trafficking, and Organized Crime within the Police are now part of the mandate of the Main Department on Especially Serious Crimes within the Investigative Committee.(29) Under the new system, police officers respond to allegations of a crime and conduct a pre-investigation during a period of 10 days to determine whether a crime has been committed. After this period, the case is either transferred to the Investigative Committee for full investigation or dropped due to lack of evidence of a crime.(32) The Main Department on Especially Serious Crimes within the Investigative Committee has 40 investigators.(29)

In 2014, approximately 300 police officers were engaged in the investigation of cases involving the worst forms of child labor.(35) Both police officers and MoLSA employees received training on human trafficking, including training on interviewing victims of child trafficking, in 2014.(15) The Police developed modules on Juvenile Justice in the Republic of Armenia and trained 24 officers on dealing with criminal cases involving minors.(35) However, a source reported that law enforcement officials do not receive sufficient specialized training on interviewing child victims of crime.(4)

In 2014, law enforcement investigated a total of five criminal cases involving minors, including one new case involving a child trafficked for forced begging.(15, 35) Two individuals were charged with child trafficking and their cases were sent to the courts.(35) However, a source reported that because not all the children who are referred to social service providers by the Police are officially registered as victims, official statistics for begging, forced begging, and commercial sexual exploitation may underreport the scope of the problem.(4)

Law enforcement agencies refer all at-risk children discovered during investigations to the Children Support Center of the Armenian Relief Fund, which provides medical, psychological, and social assistance to at-risk children.(25) The Government also has a National Referral Mechanism that defines procedures and responsible government agencies for identification, referral, assistance, and protection of trafficking victims, including children.(14, 25) Victim assistance includes the provision of in-kind, legal, medical, and psychological support, as well as the victims' integration into various social, educational, and employment projects.(14)

Research found that although the Police work with social service providers when conducting the pre-investigation, the Investigative Committee does not work with social service providers to ensure the well-being of the children during the investigation period.(4) Implementing the provisions of the Criminal Procedural Code on victim and witness protection continued to be difficult due to lack of an appropriate victim witness protection mechanism and of sufficient funding for these efforts.(8, 38)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established coordinating mechanisms to combat human trafficking and ensure the protection of child rights, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role &amp; Description
Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on human trafficking.(14, 25) Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and composed of various officials from 17 government entities.(14)
Inter-Agency Working Group against Trafficking in Persons	Advise, organize, and implement decisions made by the Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking.(14) Chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and composed of officials from all government entities. Includes nongovernmental stakeholders such as NGOs, international organizations, and social partners in regularly scheduled meetings.(14, 25)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission on the Protection of Child Rights	Coordinate activities of state bodies responsible for child protection, assist in developing state policy and programs aimed at the protection of children's rights, and assist in developing solutions to new child welfare problems as they arise. Facilitate cooperation between state and local government and NGOs.(25) Maintain a working group to prevent child begging, which includes representatives from the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs, the Ministry of Health, and the Ministry of Education. (25) In 2014, developed a draft proposal for approval by the Prime Minister that would introduce new functions for the Commission and expand its composition. The Commission has also developed a draft joint decision by the Police, MOLSA, and the Ministry of Health to create a working group for the purpose of introducing modern rehabilitative services for child beggars and street children.(35)

During the reporting period, the Ministerial Council to Combat Human Trafficking and the Inter-Agency Working Group against Trafficking in Persons met regularly to share information and make implementation and policy decisions.(15, 29, 33) The two groups focused on taking steps to address the National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons for years 2013–2015, particularly those related to child trafficking.(14, 29)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Armenia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Strategic Program for the Protection of Children's Rights for 2013–2016*	Outlines the Government's goals and activities in the sphere of child rights protection; formerly included a child labor component focusing on data collection on working children, awareness raising of the rights of working children, and implementation of oversight mechanisms for children's work.(39) The National Child Labor Survey and recommendations for the prevention of child labor exploitation originally envisaged in the 2013–2016 Strategic Program remains in the list of activities for 2016. However, during a 2014 revision, the Government removed the child labor component from the document.(18, 29)
National Plan of Action Against Trafficking in Persons for the Years 2013–2015	Aims to improve victim identification, including for child laborers; conduct surveys among working children; improve prevention efforts; and work with the media on the format and approach of reporting on human trafficking cases.(40) Strategies and activities fall under five sections: legislation on action against trafficking in persons and enforcement of laws; prevention of trafficking in persons; protection of and support to victims of trafficking in persons; cooperation; and surveys, monitoring, and evaluation.(40)
Concept on Combatting Violence Against Children†	Defines government priorities for combatting violence against children and outlines a list of related activities. Addresses labor exploitation of children, especially in agriculture, and commercial sexual exploitation of children, especially child trafficking.(29)
UNDAF Plan for Armenia (2010–2015)*	Focuses on poverty reduction through expanding economic and social opportunities for vulnerable groups, including by developing vocational training and technical assistance programs targeted at the most vulnerable youth.(39, 41)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Armenia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Armenia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(42)
When September Comes Program*	Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MoLSA) program, implemented by charitable organizations, that assists families with children excluded from secondary education and families of "deceased freedom fighters" with three or more children of school age. Provides school supplies, clothing, and food.(25)

Program	Description
Social Response to Labor Migration in Armenia Project*	EU-funded, 3-year project implemented by UNICEF, the Ministry of Territorial Administration, and MoLSA, designed to mitigate the social vulnerability of labor migrants' families, including children.(43) In 2014, the project resulted in an MOU with representatives from 10 communities in order to provide social support to migrant workers and their families, including by establishing preschools and child development centers.(44)
Police Hotline‡	Police-supported hotline for human trafficking and migration-related calls.(8)
Armenia Social Protection Administration II Project (SPAP)†‡	World Bank project to improve social services delivery through the functional integration of agencies responsible for social services. Continues the first SPAP efforts to co-locate service providers for social protection benefits by building 37 new Integrated Social Protection Centers.(45) Will target unemployed youth through the Youth without Education and Skills program.(45)
UNICEF Country Program for 2010–2015	Outlines a plan for the development of an enhanced child care system, a continuum of child protection services to identify and respond to the exploitation and abuse of children, and a comprehensive policy framework for protecting vulnerable children in cooperation with UNICEF.(46)
Day Care Centers‡	Government-supported day care centers that provide alternatives to working children and daytime centers that provide services for children with special needs.(33) In 2014, the Government co-funded four daytime centers to support up to 250 children, and fully owned and operated an additional three to support up to 100 children each.(33, 47-49)
Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking‡	Government shelter co-funded and run by the United Methodist Committee on Relief—Armenia that provides victims of human trafficking with medical, psychological, social, and legal services; access to education for children; and vocational training for adult victims.(15) Assisted five victims of child trafficking during the reporting period. In 2014, the Government increased funding to the shelter to approximately $36,300 from approximately $16,100 provided in 2013.(15)
School Feeding Program*	Approximately $260,000 program, co-funded by the World Food Program, which provided in-school meals to 67,000 students in 800 schools.(35)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Armenia.

Although the Government of Armenia has implemented programs to address child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in child labor in street work or in agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Armenia (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that Armenian law specifies the types of light work and the working conditions acceptable for children age 14.	2014
Enforcement	Address deficiencies in the SHI's labor inspection resources, including by increasing the number of labor inspectors and empowering inspectors to perform unannounced inspections; increasing the funding and resources available to the SHI; ensuring that all inspectors receive an adequate amount of training; and ensuring that penalties for child labor violations are sufficient to serve as a deterrent.	2014
	Ensure that the SHI is capable of monitoring, inspecting, and enforcing child labor laws through quality inspections, including targeted, complaint-based, and unannounced inspections; that inspectors have the ability to assess penalties; and that data on the number and type of inspections, violations, and penalties are made publicly available.	2014
	Protect children by providing law enforcement officials with specialized training on interviewing child victims of crime.	2014
	Implement and adequately fund a victim-witness protection mechanism for criminal proceedings.	2011 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into national policies, including the Strategic Program for the Protection of Children's Rights and the UNDAF Plan for Armenia (2010–2015).	2011 – 2014
Social Programs	Ensure that all children, including children from low-income families and those belonging to ethnic minorities, have equal access to education.	2010 – 2014
	Ensure that mainstream education is accessible to children with special education needs and children with disabilities by improving the accessibility of the physical infrastructure, bringing the child disability assessment criteria up to international standards, improving needs assessments, expanding community-based support services, and ensuring that social stigmas against individuals with disabilities do not prevent children from accessing schools.	2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Implement programs to address child labor in street work and in agriculture.	2009 – 2014

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Azerbaijan made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed amendments to the Administrative Offenses Code and the Criminal Code that impose a fine or imprisonment for employing people without an effective employment agreement, thereby providing children working without a contract with protection. The Government also instituted a new National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings, and law enforcement officials received training on best practices in investigating and prosecuting cases of human trafficking. In addition, the Government funded a program for the rehabilitation of child victims of human trafficking. However, children in Azerbaijan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. There are gaps in Azerbaijan's labor inspection system and in the training of its law enforcement officials. In addition, research found limited evidence of government programs to address child labor in the sectors where it is most prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Azerbaijan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-8) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(5, 6, 9-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Azerbaijan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.5 (70,034)
Attending School (%)	6-14 yrs.	94.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		92.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Child Labor Survey (SIMPOC) Survey, 2005.(14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton, tea,* and tobacco*† (1-8)
Industry	Construction,* activities unknown (2, 4, 15)
Services	Street work, including begging, washing cars, and vending (1-6, 8-10) Washing cars at commercial car washes (15)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 6, 9-12) Forced begging (10-12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The majority of child labor in Azerbaijan occurs in the agriculture sector. Evidence suggests that the number of child laborers involved in the production of cotton, tea, and tobacco has considerably declined in the past decade, although the significance of the decline is unknown.(2-4)

Children in Azerbaijan are trafficked for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation both domestically and transnationally. Street children, many of whom become homeless after their release from government-run orphanages and correctional facilities, are at the highest risk of becoming victims of human trafficking.(11) Children living in border towns and economically depressed rural communities have also been identified as vulnerable to becoming victims of human trafficking.(16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Azerbaijan has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 42 of the Labor Code of the Republic of Azerbaijan (17)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 250 of the Labor Code of the Republic of Azerbaijan (17)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 98 and 250–254 of the Labor Code of the Republic of Azerbaijan; Decision 58 of the Cabinet of Ministers in 2000; Article 9 of the Law of the Republic of Azerbaijan on the Rights of the Child (17-19)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 35 of the Constitution of the Azerbaijan Republic; Article 144-2 of the Criminal Code of the Azerbaijan Republic (20, 21)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		The Law of the Republic of Azerbaijan on Trafficking in Persons; Articles 106, 144-1, 144-3, and 173 of the Criminal Code of the Azerbaijan Republic (21-24)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 108, 151, 152, 171, 171-1, and 242–244 of the Criminal Code of the Azerbaijan Republic (22, 25)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 28 of the Law of the Republic of Azerbaijan on the Rights of the Child; Article 170 of the Criminal Code of the Azerbaijan Republic (19, 22)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Articles 2,3, and 12 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (26)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	19	Article 36 of the Law on Military Obligation and Military Service (26, 27)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 5 and 19 of the Education Law of Azerbaijan (28, 29)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 5 of the Education Law of Azerbaijan; Article 22 of the Law of the Republic of Azerbaijan on the Rights of the Child (19, 28)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

According to Articles 2 and 3 of the Labor Code, the Labor Code only applies to workers with written employment contracts. (17) As a result, labor protections do not apply to children working without a written employment agreement. However, in February 2014, the president signed amendments to the Administrative Offenses Code and the Criminal Code that impose a fine or imprisonment for employing people without an effective employment agreement, thereby attempting to ensure that all working children will be working under a contract. (6)

In June 2014, the Government amended the Labor Code to require all labor contracts to be registered in a central database, including the retroactive entry of all current valid contracts. Additionally, the legislation requires all businesses to register with the Government in order to grant contracts to any employees. (15, 16) Companies that do not enter their contracts into the database are subject to the same penalties as those who employ workers without a contract. This will assist with the enforcement of child labor laws by facilitating the detection of child workers who are employed without a contract. (15, 16)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSPP)	Enforce labor laws related to the worst forms of child labor. (30)
State Labor Inspection Service (SLIS) within the MLSPP	Enforce the Labor Code, including provisions related to child labor. (2) Investigate child labor complaints and ensure that violations of child labor law receive attention from the proper agencies. (30)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA)	Function as the central executive agency responsible for public security and prevention and exposure of criminal offences, including child trafficking and begging. (2) Through the Anti-Trafficking Division (ATD), enforce trafficking laws, investigate trafficking violations, and enforce criminal laws related to the use of children in illicit activities. (5) Refer children who are victims of human trafficking to social services for assistance with school enrollment, registering for recreational activities, and obtaining proper documentation. (5)
The Commission on Juvenile Issues and Protection of Minors' Rights	Coordinate efforts on enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Located under the Cabinet of Ministers and consists of relevant state agencies. (30)
The National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons (NRM)	Refer victims of human trafficking to the relevant authorities, ensuring the protection of their rights. (31) Refer human trafficking cases to the ATD for prosecution. (12) Led by the National Coordinator and the Deputy-Minister of the MIA; counts a large number of government agencies as members, including the MLSPP and the State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA). (12)

Law enforcement agencies in Azerbaijan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the State Labor Inspection Service (SLIS) employed 220 labor inspectors. (32) The SLIS reports that all inspectors receive training on identification of trafficking victims and situations of labor exploitation. (16) However, research did not find information on whether inspectors received training on laws and the enforcement of laws relating specifically to child labor and/or hazardous child labor. Limited evidence suggests that inspectors may not be adequately trained on child labor, including hazardous child labor. (6)

In 2014, the SLIS conducted 8,546 labor inspections, during which compliance with child labor laws was examined. The MLSPP has reported difficulty in investigating and prosecuting child labor violations due to conflicting bureaucratic mandates and the lack of mechanisms for effective interagency cooperation. (15)

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Social Protection of Population (MLSPP) reported carrying out targeted child labor inspections in the trade, construction, and service sectors, but information on the number of investigations conducted was unavailable. The SLIS identified six child labor law violations, all of which involved children working at car washes. (15) Five of the companies found to be in violation received fines of $13,800, while one company received a warning. (16)

While the SLIS does conduct unannounced inspections, the MLSPP reports that subjects of unannounced child labor investigations are often warned of the investigation in advance through unofficial channels, indicating a problem with internal integrity of the SLIS.(15) In addition, the Government does not have a mechanism for filing and responding expeditiously to complaints about child labor.(6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research did not find information on the number of investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor. During the reporting period, officials from the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MIA) attended numerous trainings on trafficking in persons both in Azerbaijan and internationally.(16) In addition, in November 2014, the U.S. Embassy in Baku trained 25 prosecutors, judges, criminal investigators, and trafficking victim shelter personnel on best practices in investigating and prosecuting cases of human trafficking.(33)

In 2014, the Anti-Trafficking Division (ATD) of the MIA reported one child victim of commercial sexual exploitation.(16) Research did not find information on investigations, convictions, or penalties implemented for violations of criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor during 2014.(6)

Although the National Referral Mechanism for Trafficking in Persons (NRM) exists to refer victims of trafficking, including child trafficking, to the relevant government agencies, research found that the NRM's efficacy was damaged by a lack of interagency cooperation, despite the introduction of a number of MOUs between key agencies within the NRM in 2013. In addition, NGOs report that no human trafficking victims referred to the NRM by NGOs have succeeded in receiving government services.(16)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor*	Identify government priorities in the sphere of child labor prevention to facilitate efficient mobilization of resources. Established through the Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project and comprised of representatives from the MLSPP, the SCFWCA, the Ministry of Education, the Employers' Confederation, the Trade Unions' Confederation, the OSCE, UNICEF, and the ILO.(34)
State Committee on Family, Women and Children's Affairs (SCFWCA)	Serve as the primary central executive body responsible for implementing child-related policies.(2) Create and maintain an interagency case management database on child rights.(35)
Control-Coordination Group	Work with the Ministry of Education and SCFWCA to develop a national database for local agencies to identify children who are not in school and to track absentees over time and across districts.(30, 36) Established from the State Program on Poverty Reduction and Sustainable Development in 2008–2015. Membership includes representatives from the SCFWCA, the Ministries of Education, Health, and Labor and Social Protection of Population are also represented.(30)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Azerbaijan has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Joint Action Plan (2013–2015) on Elimination of Child Labor Exploitation	Joint action plan outlining coordination between the MLSPP and the SCFWCA. Planned activities include preparing social awareness campaigns on the negative consequences of child labor exploitation; organizing seminars and roundtables for state agencies involved in the fight against child labor; conducting research on child labor throughout the country; and training labor inspectors on the worst forms of child labor.(30) In 2014, the SCFWCA published a booklet on child labor rights, which it disseminated to children.(32)
National Action Plan on the Protection of Human Rights (2012–2015)	Seeks to ensure that the Criminal Code is compatible with international standards on preventing the sexual exploitation of children and to strengthen efforts to fulfill the ILO child labor conventions, respectively. Addresses human trafficking and calls for rehabilitation centers for victims.(37)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (NAP) (2014–2018)†	Aims to identify and combat the causes of vulnerability to human trafficking in Azerbaijan, through improved coordination among the government agencies, NGOs, and intergovernmental organizations involved in combating human trafficking. Also seeks to improve the identification, protection, and provision of services to victims, and to ameliorate social conditions that make victims vulnerable to human trafficking.(38) Places special emphasis on protecting the rights of child victims and preventing trafficking of vulnerable children and youth.(16, 38)
UNDAF (2011–2015)	Seeks to improve identification, referral, and legal support services for victims of trafficking, as well as to build the capacity of judiciary and law enforcement personnel.(39)
State Program on Poverty Reduction and Sustainable Development (2008–2015)	Seeks to improve social protection for the most vulnerable populations, including child laborers. Calls for developing a national action plan to address the issues of abandoned and street children.(40) Includes a plan to improve efforts to make schools better and more accessible, and to decrease educational costs by providing free textbooks and hot meals for children.(40)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The ATD consulted with a wide array of international and domestic partners, including NGOs, when developing the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings (NAP). The NAP addresses many prior international recommendations, but lacks clear indicators of the source and amount of funding for full implementation of associated programs.(16) NGO-run shelters that are tasked by the NAP with providing victim services do not currently receive funding from the Government. Directors of these shelters note that the informal method of funding prevents long-term planning and capacity building of shelters.(16)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Azerbaijan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
The program of social rehabilitation and social reintegration of child victims of trafficking (2014–2016)†‡	Government program implemented by the MLSPP, SCFWCA, and Ministry of Education. Assists children who are victims of human trafficking and their families by establishing a system of monitoring the social reintegration of child victims of trafficking and providing for professional development of psychologists and medical professionals.(41, 42)
Victim Assistance Center (VAC) for Victims of Human Trafficking	MLSPP-supported program that provides medical, psychological, and social rehabilitation and reintegration assistance to victims of trafficking, including children.(12, 16)
Baku Shelter for Victims of Human Trafficking‡	MIA-run shelter for victims of human trafficking. In 2014, MIA invested $120,000 to renovate the shelter.(16)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Azerbaijan.(34) In 2014, facilitated the establishment of a National Steering Committee on Child Labor.(34)
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)†	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Azerbaijan, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity of the Government to conduct research in this area.(43)
Targeted Social Assistance Program (TSA)*‡	MLSPP-run program that provides cash transfers to low-income families.(44, 45)
Statistical Analysis on Child Labor and Street Children in Azerbaijan	SCFWCA and UNICEF collaboration to create a comprehensive report on the situation of street children in 11 cities and districts of Azerbaijan.(16)

Program	Description
Centers for Vulnerable Children‡	Government-funded program comprising 13 centers that provide social services to vulnerable children including street children and orphans.(46, 47) NGOs reported that the centers are effective in providing services and may contribute to a reduction in child labor.(6) The centers were originally established in 2013, but ran out of funds and closed by the end of 2013.(6) In August 2014, funding for the shelters was restored; however it is not clear if the funding is permanently secured.(46, 47)
MIA Identification Document Program‡	Provides identification documents to undocumented minors who may be street children or victims of human trafficking.(6)
USAID Anti-Trafficking in Persons Project†	$610,00 USAID-funded, OSCE-implemented program to provide technical assistance and financial support to civil society organizations operating shelters for victims of human trafficking, including children.(33, 48)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Azerbaijan.

Although the Government of Azerbaijan has implemented programs to address child trafficking, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children working in agriculture, in construction, or on the street.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Azerbaijan (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions apply to children working without a written employment agreement.	2011 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors receive adequate training on the enforcement of laws relating to child labor.	2014
	Strengthen the inspection system by developing a system to receive and act on child labor complaints and by tracking and monitoring labor inspections to collect data that would facilitate targeted inspections.	2011 – 2014
	Make complete data on the number of investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor and on the number of investigations, convictions, and penalties related to criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor publicly available.	2014
	Improve interagency cooperation to ensure that the NRM functions adequately and provides needed services to all victims of child trafficking, including victims identified and referred by NGOs.	2014
Government Policies	Fully fund the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Human Beings.	2014
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the extent of children's continued involvement in the production of commercial agricultural goods, and to determine specific activities related to children's work in construction in order to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and on the streets.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Bahrain made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking to support the implementation of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons. Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has not conducted research to determine the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in the country. Furthermore, the Government has not published information on enforcement or established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation, in Bahrain.(1) Data on key indicators on children's work and education are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2014.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street begging* (4)
	Domestic work* (1)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation* (1)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2014, the Government did not conduct or participate in research to determine the extent to which children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(1)

In 2014, there were cases of children who traveled to Bahrain with falsified documents to work as domestic workers.(1)

In Bahrain, citizenship is derived from the father. As a result, children of Bahraini mothers and non-Bahraini fathers may be stateless. However, depending on the laws of the father's country of origin, children of non-Bahraini fathers may be able to acquire the citizenship of another country.(5) While no law or official policy prohibits stateless children from accessing government-funded education, stateless children cannot register at schools due to lack of legal documents such as birth certificates.(6-8)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bahrain has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 24 of the Labor Law (9)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 27 of the Labor Law (9)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 1 and 2 of the Ministerial Order No. 23 of 2013 (10)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons (11)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 1 of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons (11)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 324–327 of the Penal Code; Article 39 of the Child Law (12, 13)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 59 and 68 of the Child Law (12)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 24 of the Defense Force Act (14)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 1 of the Education Act (15)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 7 of the Constitution (16)

The minimum age protection in the Bahraini Labor Law does not apply to children working in certain industries, such as domestic work.<sup>(9)</sup> However, some Government policies help prevent child labor in domestic work. For example, visa policies require all individuals seeking to migrate to Bahrain and work to be at least 18 years of age. Similarly, children already in Bahrain as dependents of migrants cannot obtain a work visa.<sup>(17)</sup>

Under Article 326 of the Penal Code, which penalizes commercial sexual exploitation, children ages 15-18 may be prosecuted for commercial sexual exploitation.<sup>(13, 18)</sup> However, it is standard practice in Bahrain in those situations for the children to be placed in a rehabilitation center and not prosecuted.<sup>(17)</sup> Additionally, Articles 1.26 and 1.27 of the Ministerial Order No. 23 of 2013 prohibit the employment of minors in bars and nightclubs which are sectors particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation.<sup>(10)</sup> This reduces children's vulnerability to commercial sexual exploitation and the likelihood of prosecution.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor	Enforce child labor laws, along with the Labor Market Regulatory Authority.(19) Inspectors often take the lead role in initial mediation to resolve violations of the labor law. Violations that are not resolved through mediation are referred to the Public Prosecutor's office.(1)
Labor Market Regulatory Authority	Issue work visas to ensure that individuals coming to Bahrain as migrant workers are at least 18 years of age.(1) Plans to include hotline operators who can communicate with victims in additional languages.(20)
Ministry of Social Development (MOSD)	Maintain a hotline to receive complaints on child labor and child abuse.(21)
Police Department of the Ministry of the Interior	Enforce criminal laws that prohibit the worst forms of child labor in coordination with MOSD, the Ministry of Justice and Islamic Affairs, and the Public Prosecutor's Office, as needed. Oversee the 12-person Criminal Investigations Directorate that investigates potential cases of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(19) Refer any identified child victims of human trafficking or illicit activities to the Center for Child Protection.(1) Maintain a hotline to receive criminal complaints of child labor, including its worst forms.(21)
Public Prosecutor's Office	Prosecute all crimes related to child labor and human trafficking.(22)

Law enforcement agencies in Bahrain took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor employed 33 labor inspectors as a part of its regular inspection process. Given the size of the workforce in Bahrain, the number of labor inspectors is insufficient. All inspectors received training on the Labor Law, including issues related to child labor.(1) In 2014, they carried out more than 11,000 inspections and found no violations of child labor laws. (1) Article 13 of the Resolution on Inspection authorizes inspectors to visit work sites, including unannounced visits.(23) It is not known how many of the inspections conducted in 2014 entailed worksite visits and whether such visits were announced or not. Likewise, research did not reveal information on the type of inspections, or on the number of complaints received on the Ministry of Social Development's hotline, including complaints that may have been related to child labor.(21)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, research did not find information on the number of investigators. Police officers attended several trainings during the reporting period, both in Bahrain and internationally, on combatting human trafficking.(1) From 2012 until the end of 2014, 34 judges and members of the Public Prosecutor's Office also participated in three sessions that covered child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation.(22) In 2014, the Public Prosecutor's Office investigated 21 cases of human trafficking, including 16 cases of commercial sexual exploitation.(20) None of the investigations involved the worst forms of child labor.(21) Of the seven cases that were referred to the court in 2013, six sentences and one acquittal were issued.(20) It is not known how many of the seven cases may have involved children.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the National Committee on Combating Human Trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee on Combating Human Trafficking	Coordinate trafficking policies and organize educational and outreach campaigns to raise awareness on trafficking in persons.(24) Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, other members include representatives from Ministry of Labor, Ministry of the Interior, Ministry of Justice, MOSD, Ministry of Information, Labor Market Regulatory Authority, and representatives from non-governmental organizations, including the Migrant Workers Protection Society.(21) Met regularly in 2014.(20)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bahrain has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking (2014 – 2015)†	Supports the implementation of the Law on Combating Trafficking in Persons.(21)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government of Bahrain has adopted the National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, research found no evidence of a policy to combat other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Bahrain funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Dar al Aman Shelter‡	MOSD shelter that provides legal, medical, and psychological services to victims of human trafficking, labor exploitation, and commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 20)
Child Protection Center‡	Government center that provides treatment and counseling to child victims of abuse, including sexual exploitation.(4, 25) Receives referrals of child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation from the Ministry of the Interior.(1)
Social Welfare Dignity Home‡	Government program that provides services to homeless persons and beggars, including children.(4)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Bahrain.

Although the Government has implemented programs to assist victims of human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and begging, research found no evidence of programs specifically aimed at protecting children engaged in domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bahrain (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including Its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the law’s minimum age provisions do not exclude children working in certain industries, including in domestic work.	2014
	Ensure that laws do not allow the prosecution of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.	2010 – 2014
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014
	Collect and make publicly available data on the notification system for labor inspectors, the type and quality of inspections, as well as the number of investigators responsible for cases related to the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014
	Gather the number of complaints made to the MOSD hotline and disaggregate the number of complaints to discern how many of them relate to child labor.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2014
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2014
Social Programs	Conduct a comprehensive study of children’s activities to determine the extent to which children are engaged in or at risk for involvement in child labor, including the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Ensure universal access to education, particularly for stateless children.	2014
	Develop programs to address the issue of children working in domestic work.	2010 – 2014

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Bangladesh made a moderate advancement in its efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government formed the National Child Labor Welfare Council to coordinate its efforts to eliminate child labor, including its worst forms, but the Council did not meet during the reporting period. The Ministry of Labor and Employment also hired 152 new labor inspectors and provided training to new and existing inspectors. However, children in Bangladesh are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work. The legal framework does not protect children working in informal economic sectors, including small farms, street work, and domestic work, where child labor is most prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bangladesh are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work.(1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Bangladesh.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	10.1 (3,717,540)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	81.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		74.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Labor Force Survey, 2005 – 2006.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including gathering honey,* harvesting tea leaves,* and poultry farming (2, 5-8)
	Fishing* and drying fish (6, 7, 9)
	Harvesting and processing shrimp (2, 6, 10, 11)
	Mining salt† (5, 7)
Industry	Production of hand-rolled cigarettes ( bidis ),† bricks,† footwear,† garments, textiles, glass,† jute textiles, leather,† matches,† soap,† and steel furniture† (2, 5, 7, 12-18)
	Ship breaking† (2, 19, 20)
	Carpentry,* welding,† and construction, activities unknown (6, 7, 21)
	Domestic work (2, 5, 17)
Services	Pulling rickshaws* and street work, including garbage picking, recycling, vending, begging, and portering (2, 5, 6, 17)
	Working in hotels and restaurants* (2, 5, 21)
	Repairing automobiles*† (2, 5, 21)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in the drying of fish and the production of bricks* (22-25)
	Forced begging* (26, 27)
	Used in drug dealing* (28)
	Commercial sexual exploitation,* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 29, 30)
	Street work and domestic work, each as a result of human trafficking* (27, 29)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Some children in Bangladesh work under forced labor conditions in the dried fish sector and in brick kilns to help pay off family debts to local moneylenders.(23, 31) Some Bangladeshi children are trafficked internally, and others are trafficked to India and Pakistan for commercial sexual exploitation. Bangladeshi children are also trafficked internally for street work and domestic work. (29) Gangs kidnap and force children to beg on the streets.(27)

By law, education is free and compulsory in Bangladesh through fifth grade, but several factors contribute to children not completing primary school, such as high student-teacher ratios and short school days of only 2 to 3 hours. The associated costs of teacher fees, books, and uniforms also prevent many children from attending school.(28)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bangladesh has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Section 34 of the Bangladesh Labor Act (32)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Sections 39 and 40 of the Bangladesh Labor Act (32)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Section 40.3 of the Bangladesh Labor Act; Statutory Regulatory Order Number 65 (32, 33)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 370 and 374 of the Penal Code; Section 34 of the Constitution; Sections 2.15 and 9 of the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act (34-36)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 12 of the Suppression of Violence Against Women and Children Act; Section 3 of the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act (36, 37)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 372 and 373 of the Penal Code; Section 12 of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act; Sections 5 and 6 of the Suppression of Violence Against Women and Children Act; Sections 78 and 80 of the Children's Act (34, 37-41)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Sections 2.15 and 3 of the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act; Section 79 of the Children's Act (36, 38, 40)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	16, 17	Air Force and Army regulation titles unknown (42, 43)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	10	Section 2 of the Primary Education (Compulsory) Act (44)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 17 of the Constitution (35)

* No conscription (45)

The Bangladesh Labor Act excludes the informal economic sectors in which child labor is most prevalent, including domestic work, street work and small-scale agriculture.(32, 46)

The 2010 National Education Policy raised the age of compulsory education from grade 5 (age 10) to grade 8 (age 14); however, until the legal framework is amended to reflect the new compulsory education age, the policy is not enforceable.(2, 47-49)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor.(50)
Bangladesh Police	Enforce Penal Code provisions protecting children from forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(2, 46, 51)
Bangladesh Labor Court	Prosecute labor law cases, including child labor law violations. Impose fines or sanctions against employers that violate labor laws.(52)
Anti-Human Trafficking Police Unit	Investigate cases of human trafficking, forced labor, and commercial sexual exploitation, including those involving children. Enforce anti-trafficking provisions of the Prevention and Suppression of Human Trafficking Act.(2)
Child Protection Networks	Respond to a broad spectrum of violations against children, including child labor. Composed of officials from a variety of agencies with mandates to protect children, prosecute violations, monitor interventions, and develop referral mechanisms at the district and sub-district levels between law enforcement and social welfare services.(2, 6, 51)

Law enforcement agencies in Bangladesh took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) hired 152 additional labor inspectors, bringing the total number of labor inspectors to 335, with 575 inspector positions authorized.(28) While the number of labor inspectors is insufficient for the size of Bangladesh's workforce, DIFE received approval to hire an additional 189 candidates.(53, 54) The Ministry of Labor and Employment (MOLE) provided labor law and inspection training to new and existing labor inspectors during the reporting period.(54) While labor inspectors received training on the Bangladesh Labor Act, which included child labor issues, inspectors did not receive training exclusively on child labor law enforcement.(52) The DIFE budget was increased from $970,000 in 2013 to $3 million for 2014 – 2015.(55)

During the reporting period, DIFE filed six cases of child labor violations with the Bangladesh Labor Court.(52) Information on the number of labor inspections and number of child labor law violations and penalties issued conducted is not available. DIFE conducts unannounced onsite inspections of factories and small businesses to investigate various labor issues, including child labor. (56) However, there are reports that inspections rarely occur at unregistered factories and establishments, where children are more likely to be employed.(10, 57)

Child labor complaints can be reported to the National Helpline Center for Violence Against Women and Children.(58) Research did not find information on the number of calls related to child labor. The penalty of a $62 fine for a child labor law violation is an insufficient deterrent, and inspectors do not have the authority to directly issue citations or assess penalties.(6, 56) Research did not find whether a mechanism exists through which DIFE can refer children to a child protection network or refer cases involving child labor law violations to the Bangladesh Police.

In March 2014, MOLE, with support from the ILO, launched a publicly accessible database for labor inspections in all export factories in the ready-made garment sector. Currently the database includes synthesis reports from safety inspections conducted by the Alliance for Bangladesh Worker Safety, the Accord on Fire and Building Safety in Bangladesh, and the Bangladesh University of Engineering and Technology.(7)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Home Affairs and UNICEF provided child interviewing training to 269 police officers, 267 Border Guard Bangladesh personnel, and 6 Coast Guard officers.(59) Information regarding the number of investigators responsible for enforcing laws against the worst forms of child labor is unavailable. Information on the number of investigations, the number of prosecutions, the number of convictions, and penalties implemented is unavailable. The anti-human trafficking police unit reportedly has insufficient funds and staff, and therefore lacks the resources to adequately address cases of child trafficking, forced child labor, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(59)

The Bangladesh Police report that there were 592 cases of human trafficking and 8 convictions for crimes involving human trafficking during 2014. Disaggregated data for investigations and convictions involving child victims is not provided.(60) The police also report that 220 children were victims of human trafficking, and 156 children were recovered from human trafficking during 2014.(60) Information on the implementation of penalties for perpetrators of child human trafficking is not available for the reporting period.

The Bangladesh Police refer cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the District Magistrate to determine whether the case should be prosecuted. However, there is no formal mechanism by which the police refer children in the worst forms of child labor to the Child Protection Network or other child welfare service providers.(26) The Bangladesh Police may refer human trafficking victims to NGOs for protection and social services through informal mechanisms.(59)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role &amp; Description
National Child Labor Welfare Council*	Coordinate efforts undertaken by various Government agencies to eliminate child labor, and advise on and assess the implementation of the National Child Labor Eradication Policy (NCLEP). Chaired by the Ministry of Labor and Employment, and composed of officials representing relevant Government ministries, international organizations, child advocacy groups, and employer and worker organizations.(61)
Counter-Trafficking National Coordination Committee, Ministry of Home Affairs (MHA)	Coordinate Government ministries involved in countering international and domestic trafficking in persons, including child trafficking.(62) Integrate the work of Government agencies and international and local NGOs on human trafficking through bimonthly coordination meetings. Oversee district counter-trafficking committees, which oversee anti-trafficking committees for sub-districts and for smaller administrative units.(26, 29, 62)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Rescue, Recovery, Repatriation, and Integration Task Force, MHA and UNICEF	Coordinate Bangladesh and India's efforts to rescue, recover, repatriate, and reintegrate trafficked persons, particularly children. Liaise with a variety of ministries, Government departments, NGOs, and international organizations that assist trafficked children.(26, 63)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

In February 2014, the Government formally announced the formation of the National Child Labor Welfare Council; however, the Council did not meet during the reporting period.(64)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bangladesh has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
NCLEP (2010 – 2015)	Guides law-making and policy-making to eliminate the worst forms of child labor through interventions that will remove children from the worst forms of child labor and provide them with viable work alternatives.(47, 50, 65)
Child Labor National Plan of Action (NPA) (2012 – 2016)	Identifies strategies for implementing and mainstreaming the NCLEP, including developing institutional capacity, increasing access to education and health services, raising social awareness, strengthening law enforcement, and creating prevention and reintegration programs.(66)
Sixth Five-Year Plan (2011 – 2015)	Includes the elimination of child labor as a Government priority and identifies the NCLEP and its NPA as the Government's central strategy to eliminate child labor.(67)
National Plan of Action to Combat Human Trafficking (2012 – 2014)	Establishes a consolidated framework for the national response to internal and cross-border human trafficking. Outlines a timeline for anti-human trafficking activities; specifies roles of different ministries and organizations to implement activities; sets out mechanisms for interagency coordination; and proposes a centralized system for monitoring, reporting, and evaluating.(62)
National Labor Policy	Includes provisions on the prohibition of child labor in the informal and formal employment sectors in urban and rural areas. States that the Government will take necessary actions to ensure that children do not engage in hazardous labor and aims to create opportunities for children to access primary education.(68)
National Education Policy*	Specifies the Government's education policy, including pre-primary, primary, secondary, vocational and technical, higher, and non-formal education policies. Increases the compulsory age for free education to grade 8 (age 14).(49)
National Plan of Action for Education for All (2003 – 2015)	Includes provisions that target child laborers for non-formal basic education programs.(69)
National Skills Development Policy	Outlines a skills development program for legally working-age children as a means of contributing to a workplace free from child labor.(70)
National Policy for Children	Aims to mitigate child labor by implementing steps set out in the NCLEP's strategies for eliminating child labor.(71)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In 2014, the Government drafted the National Corporate Social Responsibility Policy for Children, which will provide guidance to businesses in the formal and non-formal sector on how to respect and protect the rights of children.(28, 72) The Government is in the process of approving the Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy, which was drafted in 2010. The policy would help protect the rights of child domestic workers and would make domestic work a hazardous occupation prohibited for children.(28, 73)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Bangladesh funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Eradication of Hazardous Child Labor, Phase III‡	Three-year Government program that targets 50,000 children between ages 10 and 14 for withdrawal from hazardous labor through non-formal education and skills development training.(47, 74)
Initiative to Eliminate Child Labor from Urban Slums and Rural Areas	UNICEF, the Ministry of Women and Children's Affairs, and the Ministry of Social Welfare (MSW) four-year project that provides conditional cash transfers and employment training, outreach and referral services, and social protection services for 500,000 children and 30,000 adolescents.(2)
Services for Children at Risk Project	MSW five-year program that provides integrated child protection services to children engaged in child labor, including its worst forms.(58)
Child Sensitive Social Protection Project	UNICEF-funded MSW program to reduce abuse, violence, and exploitation of children and youth by improving access to social protection services.(58)
Enabling Environment for Child Rights	Ministry of Women and Children's Affairs program, supported by UNICEF, that rehabilitates street children engaged in risky work.(28)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce (CLEAR) Child Labor Project†	USDOL-funded, capacity-building project implemented by the ILO in at least 10 countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards; improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor; develop, validate, adopt, and implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor; and enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at the reduction and prevention of child labor in Bangladesh.(75)
Global Action Program (GAP) on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Bangladesh, aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and forced labor through data collection and research.(76)
Expanding the Evidence Base and Reinforcing Policy Research for Scaling Up and Accelerating Action Against Child Labor	USDOL-funded, 3-year project implemented by the ILO-IPEC to provide technical assistance to develop a national child labor survey. The Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics collected data from January 1 to December 31, 2014, for a National Child Labor Survey as part of the Labor Force Survey.(77, 78)
Shelter Project‡	Nine shelters that provide services to women and children who have experienced violence, including human trafficking.(2)
National Helpline Center*	National Helpline Center for Violence Against Women and Children—operated 24/7, toll-free hotline. Provides support and guidance to children involved in violent and hazardous situations.(58)
Community-Based Working Child Protection Project‡	MHA project that aims to combat human trafficking in Dhaka. Objectives include enhancing preventive and protective measures, improving victim care, and strengthening the Government's capacity to prosecute human trafficking-related crimes.(40, 50, 79)
Actions for Combating Trafficking in Persons	USAID-funded and IOM-implemented project that aims to combat human trafficking, enhance preventive and protective measures, improve victim care, and strengthen the Government's capacity to prosecute human trafficking-related crimes.(2, 40, 50)
Employment Generation for the Ultra Poor, Phase II*‡	Government program, implemented by the Ministry of Disaster Management providing short-term employment for the rural poor.(80-82)
Vulnerable Group Development Program*‡	Government program that provides vulnerable families with food assistance and training in alternative income-generating opportunities.(50, 83, 84)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Bangladesh.

In 2014, Barbados made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government created the National Committee for Monitoring the Rights of the Child to protect the rights of children and to implement the UN CRC. The Government also supported and continued social programs that may help prevent child labor. However, although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children in Barbados are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in drug trafficking and in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Important legislative gaps remain. For example, Barbados lacks a legally enforceable list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children. In addition, the Government does not have a comprehensive policy framework to address all relevant forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although the problem does not appear to be widespread, children are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in drug trafficking and in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking, in Barbados.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Barbados. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.5 (1300)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	99.3
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	3.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		104.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2011, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2015.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Used in illicit activities, including drug trafficking* (1-5, 10)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (3-5, 7, 10)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Older men reportedly engage children in commercial sexual exploitation in exchange for material goods.(7) The Government has acknowledged the need to conduct a national survey to assess the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in Barbados.(11) However, it does not appear that the Government has undertaken such research.(2, 11, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Barbados has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Barbados

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government of Barbados has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography or the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Articles 2, 10-12, and 14 of the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act; Article 5 of the Recruiting of Workers Act (13, 14)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 2 and 8 of the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (13)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 14 of the Constitution; Articles 33-34 of the Offenses Against the Person Act (15, 16)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 2, 8, and 10 of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act (17)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 13 and 16-17 of the Sexual Offenses Act; Articles 2-3 of the Protection of Children Act (18, 19)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 22 of the Drug Abuse (Prevention and Control) Act (20)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 19 of the Defence Act (21)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Articles 2, 41, 41A, and 43 of the Education Act (22)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 2 and 52 of the Education Act (22)

Part IV of the Employment Act sets the minimum age of employment at 16 for industrial undertakings, but not for all kinds of work.(13) The Recruiting of Workers Act specifies that children between the ages of 14 and 16 can be engaged in light work with parental or guardian consent.(14) However, a list of occupations constituting light work has not been established.(5, 24) The Employment Act prohibits the engagement of children below the age of 18 in night work and any occupation that is likely to harm their safety, health, or morals. This includes industrial undertakings such as mining and quarrying.(13) However, despite reports that the Ministry of Labor (MOL) has created a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations prohibited to all children under the age of 18, it does not appear that this list has been incorporated into law or regulation.(4, 11, 25)

The Defence Act sets the minimum age for voluntary enlistment at 18.(21) However, those who wish to enlist before age 18 can do so with parental consent if they are at least 17 years and 9 months old.(4, 23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Conduct labor inspections and enforce child labor laws.(2, 4)
Royal Barbados Police Force (RBPF)	Make criminal arrests, in part through its Sex Crimes and Trafficking Unit, for infractions involving the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, as well as the use of children in illicit activities, including drug trafficking.(2, 4, 26)
Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions	Prosecute criminal offenses, including cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(27)

Law enforcement agencies in Barbados took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the MOL employed 16 labor inspectors to enforce labor laws, which is one less than the 17 labor inspectors it employed in 2013. Inspectors did not receive training on child labor issues during the reporting period.(6) Although information on the MOL's budget was not made publicly available, the Government reported that the level of funding was sufficient with regard to the scope of child labor in Barbados.(6)

Research could not determine the number of labor inspections conducted by the MOL's inspectors during the reporting period. Information was also not publicly available on the sectors or geographic areas in which these inspections were carried out.(6) The MOL reported that it did not conduct inspections specifically devoted to child labor, but checked for child labor during routine inspections. There were no reported violations of child labor laws during these inspections, and there were no complaints of child labor reported to the MOL or the Royal Barbados Police Force (RBPF).(6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the MOL's 16 inspectors also enforced criminal laws prohibiting the worst forms of child labor in conjunction with the RBPF.(6) Research did not identify the number of criminal investigators employed by the RBPF. Research could also not determine whether criminal investigators received training on the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.(6) Although information on the level of funding for criminal investigations, including of the worst forms of child labor, was not publicly available, the Government reported that its resources were sufficient with respect to the scope of the problem.(6)

The MOL recognizes the existence of some of the worst forms of child labor in Barbados, including limited commercial sexual exploitation and drug trafficking. However, the MOL reported that there were no investigations of the worst forms of child labor conducted in 2014.(6) The RBPF reported that its Sex Crimes and Trafficking Unit investigated eight suspected cases of sex trafficking during the reporting period; only one case qualified for prosecution under trafficking legislation, and its investigation is ongoing. However, research could not determine whether any of these cases involved children.(27) In Barbados, victims of trafficking and related crimes are referred by law enforcement agencies to the Bureau of Gender Affairs, which coordinates further assistance with NGOs.(27)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Task Force for the Prevention of Human Trafficking	Train personnel to identify victims of trafficking among vulnerable populations and sensitize government officials to trafficking issues. Composed of representatives of 13 agencies, including several government ministries, law enforcement agencies, and NGOs. Initiated the Sex Crimes and Trafficking Unit within the Police force.(2, 6, 26, 28) Led by the Office of the Attorney General.(27)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Labor Committee	Coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor among government agencies, law enforcement, NGOs, and other civil society organizations. Established by the MOL in 2004.(2, 10)
National Committee for Monitoring the Rights of the Child*	Advocate, advise, and make recommendations on issues and policies aimed at protecting and promoting the rights of children. Facilitate public outreach to sensitize communities and build partnerships with respect to the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which includes protections against the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.(29)

It has been reported that the Child Labor Committee has not been active for several years due to a reported absence of child labor cases.(2, 4, 6)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Barbados has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Work Plan on Human Trafficking	Addresses human trafficking in Barbados, including of children, and contains specific measures with regard to the prosecution of violators, the protection of victims, and the prevention of trafficking.(4, 26)

In September 2014, Barbados hosted and participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas, including on the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector. Specific discussions were held on strategies for the prevention and elimination of child labor.(30-32)

The Government does not have a comprehensive policy framework to address all worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Barbados funded programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Identification, Stabilization, Enablement, and Empowerment Bridge Program*‡	Ministry of Social Care, Constituency Empowerment, and Community Development program that aims to reduce poverty by addressing employment and education.(33, 34) Targets 30 families to work closely with social workers.(2, 4, 34, 35)
UNICEF Multi-Country Program for the Eastern Caribbean (2012 – 2016)*	Government of Barbados and UNICEF initiatives that address women's and children's issues. Includes the Health and Family Life Education Curriculum and the Schools Positive Behavior Management Program (formerly the Child Friendly School Initiative).(3, 36)
School Meal Subsidy*‡	Ministry of Education, Science, Technology and Innovation program that targets low-income families to encourage school attendance.(2, 4)
Child Labor Awareness Campaign	National Task Force for the Prevention of Human Trafficking campaign to raise public awareness of child labor. Aired over the radio.(6)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Barbados.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Barbados (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography and the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure the minimum age for employment is 16 for all sectors of economic activity.	2009 – 2014
	Adopt a list of occupations or activities constituting light work permissible for children authorized to conduct light work.	2012 – 2014
	Officially incorporate into the legal framework and make publicly available a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children.	2011 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure that labor inspectors and criminal investigators receive training on child labor, including its worst forms.	2013 – 2014
	Publicly report on the number of labor inspections conducted, including for child labor, and report on the sectors and geographic areas in which inspections are carried out.	2013 – 2014
	Publicly report on the number of criminal investigators employed by the RBPF to investigate the worst forms of child labor.	2014
	Ensure that inspections are conducted to identify children in the worst forms of child labor, in particular the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in drug trafficking, and make their results publicly available.	2010 – 2014
Coordination	Reactivate the Child Labor Committee to coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2014
Government Policies	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, including the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in drug trafficking.	2013 – 2014
Social Programs	Conduct a comprehensive study to assess the nature and extent of the worst forms of child labor, in particular the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in drug trafficking. Use the results of this study to develop policies and programs that address the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014
	Assess the impact that the existing school meals and poverty reduction programs may have on addressing the worst forms of child labor, especially the commercial sexual exploitation of children and drug trafficking.	2010 – 2014

In 2014, Belize made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government provided training on child labor issues to law enforcement agencies, and developed a new program to train officials on its trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation legislation, passed in 2013. However, children in Belize are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Important gaps in the country's legal framework remain. Belize does not set a minimum age of 14 for work for all sectors, and the country lacks a list of hazardous occupations that are prohibited for children. In addition, the Government does not appear to have programs that aim to reduce child labor in agriculture, a sector in which it remains prevalent.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Belize are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of trafficking.(1-4) The 2011 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, conducted by UNICEF in collaboration with the Government, found that child labor is more prominent in children ages 5 to 11 than in children ages 12 to 14, and that child labor was more prevalent in rural areas.(5, 6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Belize.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	8.3 (6,934)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	93.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	8.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		116.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2011.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting bananas, citrus fruits, and sugarcane (2, 3, 6, 9-11)
Services	Street vending (10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-4, 11, 12)

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Agricultural work and street vending are reported to often take place in the company of parents.(3, 10, 11) Some reports indicate that some children working in the agricultural sector may be vulnerable to human trafficking or forced labor.(1, 4) Children's access to education is sometimes hindered when schools charge fees and where parents must pay for textbooks, uniforms, and meals.(12-14)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Belize has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	12	Articles 54, 164, and 169 of the Labor Act; Articles 2-3 of the Shops Act (15, 16)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	14	Articles 2 and 7 of the Families and Children Act; Articles 2 and 164 of the Labor Act (15, 17)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 8 of the Constitution; Articles 157-158 of the Labor Act (15, 18)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 11-14 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Act, 2013; Article 9 of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act, 2013; Articles 49-51 of the Criminal Code (19-21)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 2, 11, and 13-14 of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Act, 2013; Articles 2-9 of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act, 2013; Articles 49-51 of the Criminal Code (19-21)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 16 of the Defence Act (22)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	14	Articles 2 and 59 of the Education and Training Act; Articles 2 and 34 of the Education Act (13, 23)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 70 of the Education and Training Act; Article 45 of the Education Act (13, 23)

* No conscription (24)

Article 169 of the Labor Act sets the general minimum age of employment at 12 years, which does not conform to international standards.(15, 25) However, Article 3(1) of the Shops Act, sets the minimum age at 14 for work in wholesale or retail trade or business.(16)

Belizean law is not consistent with international standards regarding hazardous work. Under Article 164 of the Labor Act, children under the age of 14 are prohibited from working in industrial undertakings.(15) Article 2 of the Labor Act defines industrial undertakings to include activities such as mining, manufacturing, and construction.(15) While Article 7 of the Families and Children Act prohibits children under the age of 18 from being employed or engaged in any activity that may be detrimental to the child's health, education, or mental, physical, or moral development, Belizean law is silent on which activities these might be and this Article is subject to the Labor Act which explicitly permits children over the age of 14 to work in industrial undertakings. (17) Research therefore determined that Belizean law lacks a list of comprehensive activities prohibited to all children under 18.

The Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act and the Criminal Code prohibit all forms of child sexual exploitation, including child pornography.(20, 21) However, Article 3(2) of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act permits consensual sex with a child ages 16 and 17, where a person gives or promises remuneration, gifts, goods, food, or other benefits. This provision leaves these children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(20, 26, 27)

In addition, research could not determine whether there are laws that prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.(28) Although Article 70 of the Education and Training Act and Article 45 of the Education Act make primary and secondary education tuition-free in Belize, schools may charge fees with the approval of the Chief Education Officer.(13, 23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Local Government, and Rural Development (MOL)	Enforce laws related to child labor and hazardous child labor through its Labor Department.(9, 11)
Ministry of Human Development and Social Transformation's Department of Human Services (DHS)	Receive referrals regarding child labor cases and train immigration officials, labor inspectors, and the Belize Police Department in making referrals.(3, 9) Provide welfare services for victims, including medical and social services.(29)
Belize Police Department (BPD)	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking through its Sexual Offense and Family Violence Units.(3, 6, 9)
Office of the Director of Public Prosecution	Prosecute criminal offenses, including cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(30)

Law enforcement agencies in Belize took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Labor Department employed 26 labor inspectors, which was the same number of inspectors employed in 2013. These inspectors operated in 10 offices throughout the country.(3, 11) All of the inspectors received training on labor inspections, including on child labor issues, from the Labor Commissioner.(11) The budget allocation for the Labor Department for the reporting period was approximately $765,000, although the exact amount dedicated to labor inspections was not publicly available.(29)

Labor inspectors conduct routine and complaint-driven labor inspections. Reports indicate that labor inspections in rural, agricultural areas were hampered by a lack of resources, including vehicles and fuel.(11) The Labor Department reported that approximately 1,800 labor inspections were conducted during the reporting period. However, information on the different sectors and geographic areas in which they were performed was not publicly available.(11, 31) The Labor Department did not report any child labor violations during the reporting period. As a result, it reported that there were no children removed from child labor, fines issued, or penalties assessed.(11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Labor Department, including its 26 labor inspectors, enforced criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor in coordination with the Belize Police Department (BPD).(11) During the reporting period, the BPD increased the number of police officers it assigned to investigate human trafficking from one to three officers. The Office of the Director of Public Prosecution continued to employ nine criminal investigators, a number reported to be insufficient to effectively investigate all criminal offenses in the country, including the worst forms of child labor.(30)

Belize

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

During the reporting period, training on human trafficking issues was provided to 258 government officials, which included labor inspectors, immigration officials, and social workers.(30) In late 2014, the Ministry of Human Development and the National Committee for Families and Children initiated a program to train labor inspectors and other government officials on the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (Prohibition) Act and the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Act, both of which were passed in 2013. The training sessions, supported with funding from UNICEF, began in late 2014 and were scheduled to continue into 2015.(11, 29) Reports indicate that criminal investigators and police officers lacked sufficient resources, including a lack of vehicles, to effectively investigate for violations of criminal law, including the worst forms of child labor.(30)

During the reporting period, the Government reported that there were no investigations pursuant to criminal laws on child labor. The Government reported that there were five ongoing investigations into crimes of human trafficking, and one active prosecution; however, it is not known if any of these cases involved children.(11, 30)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Child Labor Committee (NCLC)	Coordinate efforts between Ministries to combat child labor and implement National Child Labor Policy. Led by the MOL and comprised of 14 government and civil society members.(6, 9, 25)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Council (ATIP)	Identify and rescue trafficking victims, train law enforcement officials, and educate the public about the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Led by the Vice Minister of Human Development and Social Transformation and includes 12 other government agencies and civil society organizations.(4, 6, 9, 32)
National Committee for Families and Children (NCFC)	Promote, monitor, and evaluate Belize's compliance with its national and international commitments to children, including the UN CRC, which includes protections against the commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.(29)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Belize has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Labor Policy	Establishes a rights-based framework to eradicate child labor. Priority areas include strengthening current child labor laws, creating new legislation to address existing gaps, and providing educational assistance to children who have been or who are currently engaged in child labor.(6, 33) Promotes awareness and advocacy efforts, strengthening of government institutions and services, and training of labor officers to identify and provide care to children engaged in child labor.(6, 25, 33)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Strategic Plan of Action (2013–2015)	Charts a human rights, victim-centered approach to human trafficking that focuses on prevention, protection, and prosecution. Developed in 2012 in cooperation with the IOM; defines the roles and responsibilities of the ATIP Council's constituent members.(4)
CARE Model	Coordinates protection, care, and monitoring of sexually exploited and trafficked children. Outlines the role of the DHS and the BPD in receiving allegations of commercial sexual exploitation of children, makes referrals to other agencies for services, and protects children from future exploitation.(9, 32)
National Plan of Action for Children and Adolescents (2004–2015)	Calls for the revision of child labor legislation and includes the following three aims: (1) establishing protocols to improve interagency coordination; (2) increasing institutional capacity to enforce legislation; and (3) strengthening child labor prevention programs, including the creation of awareness-raising campaigns. Prioritizes child labor issues, including the worst forms of child labor.(3-6, 34)
National Development Framework, Horizon 2030*	Promotes economic growth and national well-being. Recognizes education as a basic human right and ensures access to quality education through secondary school.(35, 36)
Ministry of Education's Early Childhood Development Policy	Promotes the rights of children, from conception to age 8, and provides support to all primary caregivers. Aims to develop innovative programs targeting families of child laborers, particularly those engaged in the worst forms of child labor, and ensure those children attend school.(37)
Ministry of Education's Belizean Education Sector Strategy (2011–2016)*	Aims to improve quality and accessibility of education by focusing on retention rates, years of attendance, and teacher training. Stems from collaboration between the Ministry of Education, the Caribbean Development Bank, and other educational stakeholders.(38)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

In September 2014, Belize participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor, to foster continued cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas, including on the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector. Specific discussions were held on strategies for the prevention and elimination of child labor.(39, 40)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Belize funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Building Opportunities for Our Social Transformation (BOOST) program*‡	Government initiative to reduce poverty, funded in part by the World Bank, that provides monetary incentives for families who comply with program requirements.(6, 41) Families must ensure that children ages 5 to 17 maintain annual school attendance record of 85 percent.(6, 9, 41, 42) Program continued to expand in 2014.(11)
Primary School Completers Subsidy Program*‡	Government education program that increases school enrollment by providing families with cash subsidies contingent upon children completing primary education.(6, 11, 43)
Certification of Primary School Teachers Program*‡	Countrywide teacher training program that improves quality of instruction, school attendance, and completion rates.(6)
Enhancement of the Belize Teaching Force*	$1.2 million project, financed by the IDB, that trains teachers to improve instruction and increase both school attendance and completion rates.(44)
Special Envoy for Women and Children Outreach Program‡	Special Envoy for Women and Children campaign that raises awareness of the commercial sexual exploitation of children; includes hosting conferences and producing public service messages.(3, 11)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to improve evidence base on child labor through data collection and research.(45)
UNICEF Country Program (2013–2016)*	UNICEF program to advance the rights of children by building institutional capacity to reduce disparities and inequalities, promote early childhood development, and increase educational opportunities. Geographic areas of focus include southern Belize and the south side of Belize City.(46)
“Make Your Child Count” Birth Registration Campaign*	UNICEF project that encourages parents to register children at birth to facilitate their access to education and health benefits.(11)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Belize.

Although the Government of Belize has a program to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children working specifically in agriculture. The Government continues to face budgetary constraints for social programs that address child labor, and poverty remains high.(3)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Belize (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure the law prohibits commercial sexual exploitation with children ages 16 and 17.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure the minimum age for work is 14 in all sectors.	2013 – 2014
	Adopt a list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children and ensure that all children under the age of 18 are prohibited from engaging in hazardous work.	2009 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibit the use of children in specific illicit activities, such as drug trafficking.	2013 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure that law enforcement agencies have sufficient resources to conduct labor inspections and criminal investigations.	2009, 2011 – 2014
	Make information publicly available on enforcement efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including the number of complaints, criminal investigations, convictions, and penalties.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that law enforcement officers receive the scheduled training on the new laws on trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into national education and development policies.	2012 – 2014
Social Programs	Increase access to education by eliminating all fees as well as providing textbooks, uniforms, and meals.	2011 – 2014
	Develop new programs aimed at reducing the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture.	2009 – 2014
	Assess the impact that current government programs that aim to increase access to secondary education, improve teacher training, and provide comprehensive early childhood education have on the worst forms of child labor.	2012 – 2014

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Benin made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government adopted the National Policy for Child Protection and the Action Plan to Eradicate Child Exploitation in major national markets. The Government also increased the capacity of the Office for the Protection of Minors by extending its child protection services to 12 geographical departments of Benin where they did not previously exist. The Government continued to operate social advancement centers that provide social and reintegration services to children withdrawn from child trafficking and labor. However, children in Benin are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and particularly in the production of cotton, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. The national action plan pertaining to the worst forms of child labor remains unfunded and social programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Benin are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and particularly in the production of cotton.(1, 2) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work.(3, 4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Benin.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7-14 yrs.	20.9 (680,004)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	71.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	16.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		70.5

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2011-2012.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton† and cashew nuts*† (2, 7-9)
	Capturing,* cleaning,* and descaling fish*† (1, 9-12)
	Raising livestock*† (11, 13)
Industry	Collecting,† crushing,† washing,† and sieving stones† for gold mining*† and gravel*† and granite quarrying† (1, 2, 13-16)
	Construction, including brick-making*† (1, 2, 12, 17)
Services	Domestic work† (1, 2, 4, 13, 17-21)
	Working as mechanics*† and in the transportation industry*† (1, 9, 14, 15, 20)
	Street vending,† including gasoline (1, 2, 9, 14)

	Forced begging by Koranic teachers* (2-4, 27, 28)
	Forced labor in fishing* (1, 9)
	Commercial sexual exploitation* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2-4, 13, 17)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

An ILO-IPEC study found 2,553 children working in 102 surveyed mines and quarries across Benin.(16) Children who work in quarries are subject to long working hours and to physical injuries and illnesses from dynamite explosions, falling rocks, collapsing quarry walls, and dust inhalation.(14, 16, 29) A UNICEF study of three markets in Benin revealed more than 7,800 children working in the markets, mainly as street vendors.(17, 30) Children working in markets are exposed to injuries and sexual and physical abuse.(30)

Through the system of vidomegon, girls as young as age 7 are sent to relatives or strangers to work as domestic workers in exchange for food, housing, and schooling. In practice, some of these girls receive care and an education, while many become domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and sexual abuse.(2, 17-19) In Northern Benin, some boys, placed in the care of Koranic teachers for the purpose of education, are forced by their teachers to beg on the street or to work in fields; they must then surrender the money they have earned to their teachers.(2, 17, 27, 28)

Benin is also a source, transit, and destination country for trafficked children. Children are trafficked within Benin and in West and Central Africa for the purposes of domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and to work in agriculture and stone quarries.(2, 18, 23, 24, 26) Research shows that these children endure sexual and physical abuse; malnourishment; and, in some cases, death.(1)

Although the Constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education by law, in practice, some parents are expected to pay school fees for registration, uniforms, books, and materials.(1, 3, 18, 31) These expenses may deter families from sending their children to school and may increase the risk of children engaging in child labor or of becoming victims of human trafficking.(17) Many children in Benin, particularly in rural areas, are not registered at birth. Unable to prove their citizenship, unregistered children may have difficulty accessing services such as education.(1, 17) In addition, evidence suggests that incidences of physical, psychological, and sexual abuse, including corporal punishment and the rape of students by teachers, prevent some children from remaining in school.(1, 17, 32)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Benin has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 166 of the Labor Code (33)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 1 of the Hazardous Occupation List 2011-29 (34)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Hazardous Occupation List 2011-29 (34)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors 2006-04 (35)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 6 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors 2006-04 (35)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 3 of the Law on the Prevention and Repression of Violence Against Women and Children 2011-26; Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors 2006-04 (35, 36)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors 2006-04 (15, 35)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 06 of Law 2005-43 of June 26, 2006 (37)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 06 of Law 2005-43 of June 26, 2006 (37)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	11	Article 24 of Act No. 2003-17 of November 11, 2003 (38)
Free Public Education	Yes	Progressively Free*	Article 13 of the Constitution (39)

* Progressive introduction of free education over a period of time.

Beninese law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Article 4 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors (2006-04) prohibits the use of children in pornography; however, the sale or possession of child pornography is not prohibited.<sup>(40)</sup> Also, article 22 of the Law Relating to the Transportation and Trafficking of Minors (2006-2014) prescribes penalties, six months to two years' imprisonment, or fines for human trafficking crimes involving labor exploitation; these punishments are neither sufficiently stringent nor commensurate with the punishments prescribed for other serious crimes, such as rape.<sup>(2, 35)</sup>

Benin's Child Code is a compilation of existing legislation related to children's rights, education, protection, labor, and health. The Child Code's second volume, which contains a bill on child protection and amendments pertaining to offenses involving minors, has been pending adoption by the National Assembly since 2009.<sup>(17, 41)</sup> A revised Labor Code, which proposes to increase the penalties for child labor violations and to increase the minimum age of employment to age 15, has been developed but was not approved during the reporting period.<sup>(15)</sup>

Beninese children are only required to attend 6 years of primary school, through age 11.<sup>(42)</sup> Since the minimum age for children to work is 14, children ages 12 to 13 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they may have completed primary school but are not legally permitted to work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Civil Service (MOLCS)	Enforce labor laws and investigate Labor Code infractions, including those related to child labor, in the formal sector.(1, 43)
The Ministry of Interior's Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM), under the Criminal Police Department	Enforce laws related to the protection of minors, including the worst forms of child labor.(2, 17, 43)
Ministry of Family, Social Affairs, and National Solidarity (MFSN)	Provide support to victims of child labor and human trafficking.(17) Within MFSN, the Directorate of the Family, Children and Adolescence, is tasked with implementing assistance and social reinsertion programs for children in difficult situations.(2, 17)

Law enforcement agencies in Benin took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service (MOLCS) employed 15 labor administrators, 4 labor controllers, and 75 labor officers, 56 of whom are labor inspectors. These personnel are employed in 12 departments across Benin to ensure the application of labor laws, including those on child labor.(12) Given the prevalence of child labor in the country, the number of labor inspectors is inadequate. In August 2014, the National School of Administration and Magistrates updated the training curriculum for labor inspectors to bring it into compliance with international standards, including standards related to child labor.(41) Also, MOLCS inspectors, in conjunction with the ILO-IPEC, organized training workshops for government officials, labor unions, and other civil society groups on hazardous child labor.(44) Research did not reveal information about the number, type, and quality of labor inspections and child labor law violations found. Labor inspectors can impose sanctions and order payment for violations, which can be given to victims as compensation.(15) The Government refers children identified during labor inspections to shelters run by national and international organizations.(15) Research indicates that the labor inspectorate lacks adequate staff, material, and financial resources to effectively carry out inspections.(2) Moreover, the ILO CEACR notes that Benin's labor inspectors have conducted a steadily decreasing number of workplace inspections due to these inadequacies.(15, 45) In addition, UNICEF reports that child rights laws, including child labor laws, are often not enforced.(46)

Criminal Law Enforcement

During 2014, the Government of Benin extended the Ministry of Interior's Central Office for the Protection of Minors (OCPM)'s child protection services to 12 geographical departments where they did not previously exist. The effort consists of creating additional local offices throughout the country and training police with regard to child abuse.(2, 41) During the reporting period, OCPM trained all 15 agents on child trafficking.(44, 47) OCPM investigated four child labor violations and reported 102 cases of child trafficking. OCPM also referred 19 suspected traffickers to court for child trafficking and labor charges.(48) The hotlines operated by OCPM function exclusively in Cotonou, which makes reporting cases involving child exploitation more difficult in rural areas, where hotlines are nonexistent. The number of calls related to child labor during 2014 is unknown.(17)

During 2014, OCPM worked with the Ministry of Family, Social Affairs, and National Solidarity (MFSN) to rescue and provide temporary shelter and reintegration services to 220 victims of human trafficking, including four victims of exploitative child labor.(2, 48) Shelters also provided legal, medical, and psychological services to child trafficking victims, including foreign child trafficking victims, before repatriating them to their home countries.(49) OCPM and MFSN held sessions to raise awareness of child trafficking laws in communities where human trafficking is prevalent.(2) Despite these efforts, OCPM remained understaffed, underfunded, and without adequate office supplies, transportation, and fuel to enforce laws effectively and provide victims with immediate assistance.(2, 17)

Research also did not uncover information about the number of prosecutions and convictions, or on whether appropriate penalties were applied related to the criminal enforcement of laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Local judges are not trained on child protection issues, nor are they sufficiently aware of international standards regarding the worst forms of child labor.(17)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor (CDN)	Elaborate policies; approve programs; and coordinate, monitor, and evaluate efforts to combat child labor in Benin.(17) Led by the Ministry of Labor and Civil Service. Comprises delegates from multiple Beninese ministries, UNICEF, ILO, trade unions, and NGOs.(15)
National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection (CNSCPE)	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on child protection. Chaired by MFSN and comprises five technical committees, including committees for human trafficking and labor exploitation.(15, 50) Each committee has an action plan and proposes activities to the CNSCPE.(43) Meets on a quarterly basis and includes 40 members from sector-based ministries, NGO networks, international technical and financial partners, and bilateral partners.(40, 43)
Departmental Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection (CDSCPE)	Coordinate, monitor, and evaluate efforts on child protection at the departmental level. Comprises six departmental committees that identify child protection activities, and compile and analyze the data gathered to report it to the CNSCPE.(12, 44)
National Commission on Children's Rights	Coordinate and promote efforts on children's rights at the national level. Chaired by the Ministry of Justice and comprises delegates from multiple other ministries and representatives of civil society groups appointed by the Minister of Justice.(17)

In 2014, the National Executive Committee to Combat Child Labor (CDN) met regularly to coordinate and evaluate existing child labor programs in Benin. The National Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection (CNSCPE) met twice during the year to monitor government efforts on child protection.(41) Research did not determine whether the Departmental Monitoring and Coordination Working Group for Child Protection (CDSCPE) and the National Commission on Children's Rights were active during the reporting period. A 2014 UN Human Rights Council report noted that the overlapping mandates for the CDN, CNSCPE, CDSCPE, and the National Commission on Children's Rights are a source of confusion. The lack of clarity among national coordination mechanisms affects work on the ground, as a multitude of committees and local commissions are made up of the same employees.(17, 46) In addition, although there is an information management system at the national level, data are rarely analyzed or used to affect implementation on the ground.(46)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Benin has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Benin (NAP) (2012-2015)	Aims to improve child labor by conducting awareness-raising campaigns; increasing access to education and training; reducing socioeconomic vulnerabilities through livelihood strategies; increasing enforcement efforts; strengthening protection and monitoring measures for victims of exploitive child labor; and harmonizing the legal sector by ensuring that judges, police officers, and labor inspectors have access to and understand pertinent laws related to child labor.(3) The Government publicized and disseminated the NAP and began work under the NAP to harmonize legislation related to the worst forms of child labor.(15, 51) The Ministries of Labor, Justice, and Family and National Solidarity conduct activities under the NAP that are also included in each Ministry's 2014 activity plans.(15, 51)
National Policy for Child Protection (2014-2025)†	Aims to improve child protection in Benin. Includes components to improve school feeding programs and to combat the worst forms of child labor, with a focus on child trafficking. MFSN is responsible for implementing this policy.(41, 52)
Education Sector Action Plan (2006-2015)*	Aims to reduce poverty and improve access to primary education, especially for girls.(50)
Action Plan to Eradicate Child Exploitation in Markets†	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the major markets of Benin, including Dantokpa in Cotonou, Quando in Porto-Novo, and Arzèkè in Parakou. Will strengthen child labor laws, raise awareness of child labor in markets, and create social programs for children rescued from labor exploitation in the targeted markets.(41, 53)

Policy	Description
Benin and Nigeria Joint Committee to Combat Child Trafficking	Aims to reinforce border security measures and repatriate victims of human trafficking between Benin and Nigeria.(54, 55) Child victims are not repatriated unless a safe reinsertion program—such as schooling, vocational training, or an apprenticeship—has been arranged in advance.(49, 56)
Anti-Trafficking Accord Between the Republic of Benin and the Republic of the Congo	Targets the identification, prevention, and rehabilitation of cross-border trafficked children between Benin and the Republic of the Congo. Includes components for monitoring and evaluation, and for conducting cross-border investigations.(49, 57, 58)
Bipartite Declaration to Combat Child Labor Between the Government of Benin and the Beninese Worker Associations	Pledges to promote efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor and to collaborate at all levels with all parties concerned to combat child labor.(59)
PRSP (2011 -2015)*	Aims to improve free universal primary education, education quality, student retention rates, provision of social services, and vocational training and microfinance for youth and women.(54)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Despite efforts, the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Benin remains unfunded.(41)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Benin funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
MFSN Social Promotion Centers‡	Provides social services to children, including child laborers; has nationwide coverage but vary in functionality.(15, 17, 46)
OCPM Transit Facility‡	Used as interim care facility for human trafficking survivors prior to their placement in a long-term shelter. Has the capacity to house 160 children (80 boys and 80 girls).(15, 56)
Awareness-raising campaigns‡	Government-implemented nationwide human trafficking and child labor awareness campaigns.(41, 43)
Ministry of Mines' Social Services*‡	Provides business management training to 125 families, particularly women, involved in mining and quarrying; also provides protection equipment, including boots and gloves, to mining craftsman in three cities.(15, 41)
Vocational School Program for Survivors of Child Trafficking‡	MFSN program, implemented in coordination with UNICEF. Maintains a vocational school program to train survivors of child trafficking in a trade.(15, 49)
Anti-Child Trafficking Legislation Publication‡	Ministry of Justice and Family training sessions on child trafficking laws to help educate the general population.(41, 49)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS I and II	USDOL-funded regional project that supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region by providing policy and capacity-building support for all ECOWAS states.(60, 61) By the end of 2014, the project withdrew or prevented 1,507 children from the worst forms of child labor in mining and quarrying in Benin. Also provided educational services to 1,754 children and livelihood services to 1,125 families in Benin.(62)
Strengthening Social Dialogue as an Effective Tool to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012-2015)	Government of Ireland-funded, 3-year, $760,883 project to combat child labor through social dialogue.(63)
Community Teacher Professional Training Program*	$4.3 million, USAID-funded, 4-year project. Trains approximately 10,000 unlicensed teachers to enhance their competence so they can pass the teacher certification exam.(64)
Girls Education and Community Participation Project*	$6.9 million, USAID-funded, 6-year project. Increases girls' access to education and improves community participation in school management.(64)
Second Chance Schools*	$3.5 million, USAID-funded, 4-year project. Promotes alternative approaches to basic education, providing out-of-school children with basic literacy, numeracy, and life skills.(64, 65)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Benin.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although the Government of Benin has implemented programs to protect children from human trafficking and participated in programs focused on child labor in quarrying and mining, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, or agriculture.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Benin (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure laws prohibit the sale and possession of child pornography.	2010 – 2014
	Create meaningful penalties for human trafficking crimes involving labor exploitation.	2014
	Adopt the second volume of the Child Code to bring additional protection for children into force.	2009 – 2014
	Raise the compulsory education age to be equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2014
	Adopt the draft Labor Code to increase penalties for child labor violations and to increase the minimum age of employment from 14 to 15 years of age.	2013 – 2014
Enforcement	Provide recurrent training on the worst forms of child labor to judiciary officials.	2013 – 2014
	Collect and make public information on the number, type, and quality of labor inspections; law violations; and penalties assessed related to child labor.	2009 – 2014
	Increase the resources and number of labor inspectors and criminal investigators responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce and provide immediate victim assistance.	2009 – 2014
	Make publicly available information on the number of criminal agents, prosecutions, and convictions and penalties assessed related to the worst forms of child labor	2009 – 2014
	Ensure offenders of laws related to the worst forms of child labor are appropriately penalized according to the law.	2010 – 2014
	Expand hotlines operated by OCPM to facilitate the reporting of child exploitation cases in areas beyond Cotonou, and make public the numbers of calls related to child labor.	2014
	Coordination	Ensure the CDSCPE and the National Commission on Children's Rights actively carry out responsibilities related to the worst forms of child labor.
Coordination	Take measures to coordinate efforts at the national level in order to eliminate duplicative activities, committees, and actors at the local level.	2013 – 2014
	Analyze the data received from national information management systems and disseminate results nationwide.	2013 – 2014
	Government Policies	Fund and implement the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor in Benin.
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2010 – 2014
	Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in the production of fish and construction, to inform policies and programs.
Social Programs	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and agriculture, and monitor the progress of these programs.	2010 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Take measures to ensure children's safety in schools and prioritize resources to improve access to education by building additional schools, subsidizing or defraying the cost of schools, and providing access to free quality education for all children.	2010 – 2014
	Implement birth registration campaigns to increase children's access to education, especially in rural areas.	2010 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing social programs may have on addressing child labor.	2011 – 2014

In 2014, Bhutan made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government and UNODC launched the Enhance Government and Civil Society Responses to Counter Trafficking in Persons program. The Government also worked with UNDAF to launch the Bhutan One Program, which includes initiatives to prevent and respond to violence, abuse, exploitation, and neglect of children. However, children in Bhutan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work. Bhutan's minimum age for work is inconsistent with international standards and education is not compulsory. Law enforcement agencies did not provide any data on actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bhutan are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced domestic work.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Bhutan.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.8 (6,338)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	84.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	3.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		101.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(2)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS 4 Survey, 2010.(3)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* activities unknown (1, 4-6)
Industry	Mining†* (4)
	Construction,†* activities unknown (1, 4)
Services	Domestic work (1, 4-7)
	Hotel* and restaurant service* (1, 4)
	Forced domestic work sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 8, 9)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in karaoke bars* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (8, 10)
	Commercial sexual exploitation* (4, 7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

There is a lack of current data on child labor in Bhutan. To date, no national survey on child labor has been conducted. There is evidence that some children working and living in third party residences are not allowed to return home.(9) It is reported that young girls are subject to forced labor in karaoke bars. Evidence suggests that some girls are trafficked from rural areas to sing in karaoke bars, where they are subject to commercial sexual exploitation.(7)

Bhutan

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The Government provides free education to all Bhutanese citizens; however, children living in remote villages face significant difficulties in accessing public schools, which may increase their vulnerability to labor exploitation.(11)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bhutan has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	N/A
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	N/A
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	13	Section 171 of the Labor and Employment Act (12)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Sections 170 and 171 of the Labor and Employment Act (12)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Section 9 of the Regulation on Acceptable Forms of Child Labor (13)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Section 9 of the Labor and Employment Act (12)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Section 225 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 227, 379, and 280 of the Penal Code (14, 15)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Section 9 of the Labor and Employment Act; Sections 223 and 224 of the Child Care and Protection Act; Sections 225, 379 and 280 of the Penal Code (12, 14, 15)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 221 of the Child Care and Protection Act (15)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Legislative title unknown (16)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9.16 of the Constitution of the Kingdom of Bhutan (17)

*No conscription (17)

Bhutanese law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor, as the Labor and Employment Act allows children to work under the age of 14.(12)

There is no compulsory age for education. The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Resources (MOLHR)	Investigate child labor complaints and ensure employers comply with child labor laws. Refer cases involving the worst forms of child labor to the police.(18)
Royal Bhutan Police	Investigate and enforce criminal laws relating to the worst forms of child labor.(19) Refer abused and exploited children to Child Welfare Officers and the National Commission for Women and Children (NCWC).(15, 20)
Women and Child Protection Unit	Enforce laws protecting women and children as a separate unit within the Royal Bhutan Police.(1, 21) Refer abused and exploited children to Child Welfare Officers and NCWC.(15, 20)
Child Welfare Officers	Protect and assist children in difficult circumstances, including children abused and exploited for illegal purposes.(15)
Royal Court of Justice	Adjudicate criminal and civil cases, including violations involving children.(22)

The Government provided no data showing that law enforcement agencies in Bhutan took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, labor inspections were carried out but no data were provided on the actions taken to enforce child labor laws.(19) In 2011, the most recent year for which information is available, there were four labor inspectors in Thimphu and two inspectors in each of Bhutan's two regional offices.(18) The Ministry of Labor and Human Resources (MOLHR) has reported that there is an insufficient number of trained labor officers to enforce the labor laws.(23) Information is not available on child labor law training and the funding level of MOLHR.

Information is not available on the number, type, frequency, location, and quality of labor inspections, as well as whether MOLHR received complaints of labor law violations.(19) Information is not available about whether a referral mechanism exists between the MOLHR and social welfare services, such as Child Welfare Officers or the National Commission for Women and Children (NCWC). Information is also not available on the incidents involving child labor law violations and how many penalties or citations were issued during the reporting period.(19)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Information is not available on the number and training of investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor.(19) No investigations; prosecutions; or convictions involving forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation were reported by the Government.(19, 24)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism for protecting exploited children, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for Women and Children	Coordinate the implementation of policies involving abused and exploited women and children. Advise the Government on legislation and policies for the protection of women and children.(25) Composed of a chairperson and commissioners who represent relevant government agencies and nongovernment sectors.(25)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bhutan established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Bhutan

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
UNDAF Bhutan One Program (2014–2018) *†	Serves as a framework for supporting Bhutan's national development goals that target the poor and disadvantaged. Includes initiatives to prevent and respond to violence, abuse, exploitation, and neglect of children.(26)
National Plan of Action for Child Protection*	Sets out strategies for establishing a comprehensive child protection system, including passing new legislation, improving service delivery, increasing human resource capacity, instituting coordination mechanisms, increasing communication and advocacy, and collecting data and information.(27)
National Youth Policy*	Provides a framework for the promotion of youth development, including increased access to education, training, employment, and financial services. Targets out-of-school youth, domestic workers, and girls working in karaoke bars.(28)
National Education Policy*	Specifies the Government's education policy regarding curriculum, admission procedures, student health and safety, career counseling, and nonformal education.(29)
Eleventh 5-Year Plan (2013–2018)*	Establishes a strategic framework for increasing economic development, reducing of youth unemployment, improving the quality of education, and curbing corruption.(30)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Bhutan funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project Hope‡	NCWC program that provides residential shelters for children at risk of exploitative child labor. Targets children on the street and provides counseling, group therapy, and assistance to help children enroll in school.(18)
Trafficking Victims Shelter‡	Respect, Education, Nurture, and Empower Women (RENEW), a Thimphu-based NGO, receives government funding to provide shelter, counseling, and rehabilitation for women and child trafficking victims.(18)
Enhance Government and Civil Society Responses to Counter Trafficking in Persons†	UNODC and Government program that seeks to increase capacity to combat trafficking in persons. Includes six components: (1) anti-human trafficking laws; (2) train criminal law enforcement officers on victim identification, investigation, and prosecution; (3) formalize a Standard Operating Protocol for investigating trafficking cases; (4) train law enforcement on victim treatment and reintegration; (5) establish transit homes for human trafficking victims; and (6) raise public awareness of human trafficking issues.(24)
Advancing Economic Opportunities for Women and Girls*‡	NCWC program that provides economic opportunities to women and girls. Targets 960 youth to participate in apprenticeships and skills training for self-employment.(31, 32)
Child Protection System Strengthening*	UNICEF program that works to strengthen Bhutan's child protection system through capacity building trainings. Supports the implementation of a National Plan of Action for Child Protection.(33)
Improving Rural Children's Access to Basic Education with Focus on Primary Education*	WFP-funded, $8.58 million program that provides financial support to rural primary schools. Aims to increase primary school enrollment, retention, and graduation through the provision of school breakfasts and lunches. Implemented in 232 schools across the country, reaches 37,000 children annually, and supports school construction and kitchen improvements.(18, 34)
Rural Economy Advancement Program*‡	Government program that develops sustainable livelihoods in Bhutan's 126 poorest villages by diversifying crop cultivation, providing skills development training, and forming self-help groups.(30)
National Rehabilitation Program*‡	Office of the Secretariat program that assists landless, socially and economically disadvantaged groups through the provision of land, shelter, and food support, health and education services, and capacity building for sustainable livelihoods.(30)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Policy was launched during the reporting period.

The Government of Bhutan has implemented programs that target children at risk for exploitative labor and child victims of human trafficking, but there is no data on specific sectors such as agriculture and domestic service. There is no data on social programs targeting children involved in the worst forms of child labor, including domestic servitude, forced labor in karaoke bars, and commercial sexual exploitation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bhutan (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	2013 – 2014
	Ensure that the law complies with the international standard of the minimum age for work.	2010 – 2014
	Make primary education compulsory and harmonized with the minimum age for work.	2010 – 2014
Enforcement	Publish data on the number of labor inspections, number of child labor law violations, and number of citations issued and penalties assessed for child labor law violations.	2010 – 2014
	Ensure that MOLHR has the resources and training necessary to enforce labor laws and to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2014
	Establish a mechanism for MOLHR to refer child employed in violation of labor laws to child welfare service providers.	2014
	Publish data on the number and training of investigators, investigations, and prosecutions and convictions of crimes, involving the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2014
Coordination	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing social protection policies.	2014
Social Programs	Conduct a national child labor survey.	2013 – 2014
	Implement programs to make education more accessible for children living in remote locations.	2014
	Assess the impact that existing social programs may have on child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Create social programs to target working children, particularly in agriculture and forced domestic work, and children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Bolivia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor increased its number of labor inspectors from 78 to 95, and dedicated 9 of these inspectors to investigating child labor in high-risk areas. The Government also published a national policy to combat human trafficking that aims to implement the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. However, children in Bolivia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and in mining. Bolivia has received an assessment of minimal advancement because in July 2014, the Government passed a new Child and Adolescent Code that allows children as young as 10 years old to be self-employed under certain conditions. This action undermined the advancements made in eliminating child labor. In addition, the Offices of the Child Advocate, required by the new Code to authorize child work and assist victims of child labor, are absent or underfunded in many municipalities, leaving some children unprotected and vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. The Government also lacks a comprehensive child labor policy.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bolivia are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and in mining.(1, 2) Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(3, 4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Bolivia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7-14 yrs.	20.2 (388,541)
Attending School (%)	7-14 yrs.	96.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	18.7

Sector/Industry	Activity
Industry	Mining† of gold, silver, tin, and zinc (1, 8, 14-17)
	Construction,† including heavy lifting and shoveling (12, 15, 18)
	Production of bricks† (8, 9, 15, 19)
Services	Street work, including vending, shoe shining, and working as transportation assistants (8-10, 12, 15, 20)
	Recycling garbage* (9)
	Domestic service† (3, 9, 15, 20)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in ranching* and in the production and harvesting of Brazil nuts and sugarcane (1, 3, 21, 22)
	Forced labor in mining and domestic service (10, 20, 22)
	Forced begging* (22)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (10, 22, 23)
	Forced to commit illicit activities, including robbery* and producing drugs* (22)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children produce and harvest sugarcane and Brazil nuts principally in the departments of Beni, Pando, Santa Cruz, and Tarija, although recent efforts to combat this practice and other factors have reportedly reduced the prevalence of child labor in these sectors.(1, 2, 12, 17) Some indigenous Guaraní families live in debt bondage and work on ranches, including in raising cattle, in the Chaco region.(3, 7, 10, 12) Based on reports, this practice may have been reduced in recent years due in part to increased attention to the region and land tenure reform.(12) Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to commercial sexual exploitation.(22) Bolivian children have also been trafficked to Argentina, where they are victims of forced labor in the production of textiles, grapes, and in the sugar industry.(3, 23, 24)

Research on child labor in Bolivia, particularly in the informal sector, is limited. The last national child labor survey was conducted in 2008 by the National Institute of Statistics of Bolivia (INE) in collaboration with the ILO-IPEC.(4) The new Child and Adolescent Code, promulgated on July 17, 2014, mandates that a national child labor survey be conducted by the INE as part of the creation of the new Program for the Prevention and Social Protection of Children and Adolescents. The law mandates that this Program be designed by July 2016, but does not require a specific time frame for the completion of the survey within this period. (25)

Bolivian law requires children to attend school up to age 17. However, attendance rates for secondary education are low, particularly in rural areas and often because children work.(4, 15, 26)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bolivia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14/12/10	Articles 8 and 58 of the General Labor Law; Article 129 of the Child and Adolescent Code (25, 27)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 58-59 of the General Labor Law; Articles 5 and 136 of the Child and Adolescent Code (25, 27)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 136 of the Child and Adolescent Code (25)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 15, 46, and 61 of the Constitution; Article 291 of the Penal Code; Article 34 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (28-30)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 15 of the Constitution; Article 34 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (28, 30)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 34-35 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (30)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 56 of the Law on Coca and Controlled Substances (31)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 108 of the Constitution; Articles 11 and 36 of the Law of National Military Service (28, 32)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	16*	Articles 1 and 2 of the General Directive of Pre-Military Recruitment; Articles 2 and 7 of the Law of National Military Service (32, 33)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17	Article 81 of the Constitution; Articles 1, 9 and 11–14 of the Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez Education Law (28, 34)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 17 and 81 of the Constitution; Article 1 of the Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez Education Law; Article 115 of the Child and Adolescent Code (25, 28, 34)

*The minimum age for combat is 18 per Article 36 of the Law of National Military Service.(32)

The 2014 Child and Adolescent Code specifies the conditions under which children may work in addition to providing a number of other protections.(25) While the regulations for this law have not yet been written, its provisions that define the minimum age for work do not conform to international standards.(35) Article 129(1) of the Child and Adolescent Code establishes the minimum age for work at 14 years, which is in harmony with Article 58 of the General Labor Law.(25, 27) However, Article 129(2) of the Child and Adolescent Code allows children as young as 10 years old to work in self-employment upon authorization by the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate, provided that this work does not adversely affect the child's health or education, and only upon consent of a parent or guardian and after successful medical and psychological evaluations.(25) Allowing children as young as 10 years old to work may affect their schooling, which in Bolivia is compulsory to age 17.(34, 35) The ILO Committee of Experts has called upon the Government to amend Article 129 of the Child and Adolescent Code to set the minimum age for work, including in self-employment, to at least 14 years.(35)

Article 129(2) of the Child and Adolescent Code also permits children as young as 12 years old to work for third parties following the same process of authorization.(25) While ILO C. 138 allows children as young as 12 years old to engage in light work under certain circumstances, Bolivian law does not specify a list of activities that are permissible for light work, or the number of hours children are permitted to work in these activities pursuant to ILO C. 138.

Apprenticeships in Bolivia are regulated by Articles 28-30 and article 58 of the General Labor Law, which ensure that apprentices attend school. However, the General Labor Law does not set a minimum age for participation in apprenticeships.(27, 36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws, in part through its Fundamental Rights Unit, which also addresses forced labor involving indigenous peoples.(37) Conduct labor inspections, including child labor-specific investigations, in areas of national priority that include the sugarcane-producing areas of Santa Cruz and Tarija, the Brazil nut-producing areas of Riberalta and Beni, and the mining areas of Potosí.(15) Assess fines for labor law infractions and refer cases to the Labor Courts for adjudication and remuneration of unpaid wages. Engage municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to ensure the protection of children’s rights and welfare.(15) Maintain a national registry to track employment agencies engaged in the illegal recruitment and trafficking of children.(38) Assist in the implementation of the Child and Adolescent Code, including in the authorization of children’s work for third parties from the age of 14.(15, 25)
Municipal Offices of the Child Advocate	Authorize children from the age of 10 to work in exceptional cases and register them in the Government’s Child and Adolescent Information System (SINNA), pursuant to the Child and Adolescent Code. Protect the rights and welfare of children, often in consultation with NGOs, as well as file criminal complaints on behalf of victims of child labor, including its worst forms.(15, 25) Accompany child labor inspectors in their investigations and refer children rescued from child labor for services.(15, 25)
Attorney General’s Office	Oversee all trafficking in persons investigations and prosecutions.(23) Oversee through its National Coordinator’s Office regional prosecutors who, in conjunction with the Bolivian National Police, pursue cases of human trafficking for sexual and labor exploitation. Maintain a database of cases of trafficking in persons through its Coordinator of Specialized Units for the Prosecution of Human Trafficking and Smuggling, Sexual Crimes, and Gender-Based Violence.(23)
Ministry of Justice	Oversee the implementation of the Child and Adolescent Code. Create and administer SINNA, in which municipal Offices of the Child Advocate register young workers who are authorized to engage in self-employment or work for third parties, as required by the Child and Adolescent Code.(25)
Bolivian National Police	Maintain the Special Force in the Fight against Crime (FELCC) which, through its Division of Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons, runs 15 specialized trafficking in persons units to investigate trafficking crimes and coordinate anti-trafficking efforts.(15, 39) Maintain the Police Unit for Migratory Control and Assistance to address trafficking issues through migratory control efforts, in part through the patrol of national borders.(39, 40) Victims of trafficking are referred by these units to departmental Social Service Agencies (SEDEGES) or municipal Offices of the Child Advocate.(41)
Bolivian Armed Forces	Support anti-trafficking efforts by collaborating with the Bolivian National Police to detect human trafficking and child labor issues in border-crossing areas, pursuant to article 38 of the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.(30, 38)

The Child and Adolescent Code requires the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to authorize children ages 10 to 18 to engage in self-employment, and children ages 12 to 14 to work for third parties, both under certain conditions to ensure the children’s protection. The Code further requires the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate to register young workers in the Government’s Child and Adolescent Information System (SINNA).(25) However, reports indicate that as many as 20 percent of municipalities in Bolivia lack an Office of the Child Advocate; many more are reported to lack adequate resources and the capacity to perform their mandate. This lack of institutional coverage may leave certain children particularly vulnerable to child labor, including its worst forms.(15)

Law enforcement agencies in Bolivia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed 95 inspectors nationwide, including 9 inspectors dedicated solely to conducting inspections of child labor and forced labor cases.(15) This is an increase from the total of 78 inspectors employed in 2013, which included 4 inspectors dedicated solely to inspections of child labor and forced labor cases.(38) The Government reported that this number of inspectors was insufficient to inspect for child labor nationwide.(15) During the reporting period, UNICEF provided funding to send the MOL’s labor inspectors to the Ministry of Education’s Plurinational Public School, where government officials receive training on child labor. In 2014, the MOL reported that its operating budget was approximately $10,000; the amount of additional funding provided by multilateral organizations is not known.(15) The Government reported that this low level of funding was inadequate to fulfill its mandate with regard to child labor.(15)

During the reporting period, the MOL's nine child labor inspectors conducted 250 unprompted, child labor-specific inspections, with a particular focus on the departments of Beni, Potosí, Santa Cruz, and Tarija, where there is a high incidence of child labor in dangerous activities.<sup>(15)</sup> This number of inspections was higher than the 163 child labor-specific inspections conducted in 2013.<sup>(38)</sup> The exact breakdown of inspections by region and by sector for 2014 was not publicly available. The Government reports that the number of child labor-specific inspections during 2014 was inadequate to address the scope of the problem.<sup>(15)</sup> The number of general labor inspections conducted by the MOL, including whether these inspections were unprompted, was also not publicly available. All inspections were conducted with funding from UNICEF.<sup>(15)</sup>

The Government reports that children who are rescued from child labor are referred to the municipal Offices of the Child Advocate for services. However, information on the number of children rescued and whether they received services, particularly in cases where an Office of the Public Advocate did not exist, was not publicly available.<sup>(15)</sup> Research did not identify information on the number of child labor law violations or on the penalties and fines issued or paid during the reporting period.<sup>(15)</sup>

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Bolivian National Police's Special Force in the Fight against Crime (FELCC) maintained 15 trafficking in persons units that, in addition to addressing other crimes related to missing persons, address trafficking in persons for sexual and labor exploitation. Each TIP unit comprised three to four investigators.<sup>(15)</sup> The exact number of criminal investigators employed by the Government to investigate the worst forms of child labor is not known. The Government reported that criminal investigators did not receive training on the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.<sup>(15)</sup>

Information on the amount of funding provided to criminal law enforcement agencies for the reporting period was not publicly available. Some Government agencies reported that funding levels were inadequate and that they sometimes lacked fuel to conduct investigations.<sup>(15)</sup> Although there is a penalty of imprisonment for child labor exploitation and trafficking, information on the number of investigations conducted during the reporting period, the number of children removed from the worst forms of child labor, or the number of convictions obtained for these crimes was not publicly available.<sup>(15)</sup> In 2014, the Government reported approximately 380 cases of human trafficking reported to the Bolivian National Police and 12 reported sentences issued for crimes of trafficking.<sup>(39)</sup> However, these statistics were not disaggregated to distinguish between adult and child victims, and reports could not confirm if all sentences were being carried out. There was also a lack of information on whether victims of the worst forms of child labor received services.<sup>(15)</sup>

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role &amp; Description
National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor (CNEPTI)	Coordinate national efforts to address child labor issues. Led by the MOL, and includes the Ministries of Justice, Education, and Planning, as well as several NGOs. <sup>(15)</sup> Goal is to create a national plan to combat child labor for 2014–2018. <sup>(38)</sup>
Steering Committee for Zero Child Labor in Sugarcane Production	Coordinate efforts to eliminate child labor in sugarcane production. Formed with support from the MOL and the participation of the regional government of Santa Cruz, Bolivian municipal governments, the Bolivian Foreign Trade Institute (IBCE), and various NGOs. <sup>(13)</sup>
Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (Plurinational Council)	Serve as the highest national body to lead and coordinate anti-trafficking efforts. Implement the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, in part through its Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons (2013–2017). <sup>(30, 39)</sup> Chaired by the Minister of Justice and composed of representatives from eight other ministries, the Public Advocate, and representatives from NGOs. <sup>(39)</sup>
Department-Level Councils against Human Trafficking	Coordinate efforts of the Plurinational Council in each of Bolivia's nine departments. Comprised of department-level officials from the FELCC, the Ministries of Labor, Migration, and Education, the Human Rights Ombudsman, and representatives from NGOs. <sup>(15, 30)</sup>
Directorate General for the Fight against Trafficking and Smuggling	Assist in the coordination of national policy on trafficking in persons. Established under the Ministry of Government's Vice Ministry for Citizen Security, pursuant to the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. <sup>(30, 39)</sup>
Inter-Ministerial Team	Assist in the development of a National Labor Plan for 2014–2018. Created by MOL in 2013 with representation from the Ministries of Justice, Health, Education, and Government. <sup>(38)</sup>

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling (Plurinational Council) met three times and published the Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons.(39) The Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling mandates that the Plurinational Council include the participation of NGOs. However, reports indicate that NGOs have not been able to participate fully in the Plurinational Council despite their efforts for inclusion.(39)

The Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling requires each of Bolivia's nine departments to create counter-trafficking councils composed of law enforcement, judicial, and civil society officials. As of April 2014, counter-trafficking councils had been established in all nine departments; however, some of these councils were reported to lack efficacy.(15)

The National Commission for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor (CNEPTI), led by the MOL, has been increasingly inactive, and did not meet during the reporting period. Many Government agencies and NGOs agree that its central coordinating role and activities have lapsed.(15) Moreover, reports indicate that some of the MOL's departmental sub-commissions created to combat child labor have also lapsed in their function, due in part to a lack of resources.(15) In addition, some reports indicate that child labor coordination efforts between departmental sub-commissions and municipal agencies have been strained due to differences among political parties.(15)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bolivia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Plurinational Policy to Combat Trafficking and Smuggling of Persons (2013–2017)†	Sets national priorities on combatting human trafficking and smuggling, including that of children, pursuant to the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. Contains five core areas that set agendas for government efforts and programs, including the prevention of trafficking, the remediation and reintegration of survivors, the prosecution of criminal violations, the strengthening of national coordination mechanisms, and international cooperation.(42, 43) Published by the Plurinational Council in 2014.(43)
Ministry of Education's Strategic Institutional Plan (PEI) (2010–2014)*	Sets national priorities on developing and reforming the educational system. Contains five strategic objectives that include the promotion of universal access to, and participation in, an intercultural educational system.(44)
Patriotic Agenda 2025*	Sets national development priorities and objectives for 2025, including the eradication of extreme poverty, universal access to education, and multicultural integration.(45)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor†	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Bolivia at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(46–48)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Bolivia's national policy for addressing child labor, the National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor (2000–2010), expired in 2010. The Plan identified mining, sugarcane harvesting, commercial sexual exploitation, and domestic service as priority areas in combating exploitative child labor.(49) A new plan was not established during the reporting period.(36)

In December 2014, the Ministry of Education and Bolivia's Child and Adolescent Workers Union (UNATSBO) participated in the "First Plurinational Meeting of Child and Adolescent Workers for Social Inclusion and Equality." At the meeting, an 18-point agreement was signed that, among other objectives, prioritizes access to the educational system, flexibility in the school day to accommodate work schedules, curricular reform to enable students who have fallen behind to catch up to their peers, and the need for a survey to determine the educational status and needs of children and adolescents who work.(26)

In September 2014, Bolivia participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas, including on the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector. Specific discussions were held on strategies for the prevention and elimination of child labor.(50, 51)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Bolivia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Juancito Pinto Subsidy Program*‡	Government program that provides a conditional cash transfer to all primary school students to increase school attendance and reduce the dropout rate.(41, 52) Limited evidence suggests the program contributed to increased school attendance and reduced dropout rates.(15, 41, 52) Provides students with a yearly subsidy of approximately $28 if the student maintains an attendance rate of at least 75 percent.(15, 41) In 2014, assisted 2,600,000 students, or nearly 92 percent of public school population, an increase from the 2,350,000 students assisted the previous year.(15)
Ñaupajman Puriy Kereimba (ÑPK): Combating Exploitive Child Labor in Bolivia: Phase II (2010–2014)	$6-million USDOL-funded, 4-year project, implemented by Desarrollo y Autogestión (DyA) that worked to reduce the worst forms of child labor by improving educational and livelihood opportunities for families in the departments of Chuquisaca, La Paz, and Santa Cruz.(9) Assisted 3,100 children and 1,300 households in both urban and rural areas. Collaborated with the Ministry of Education to expand the Leveling Program. Closed in early 2015.(9)
Leveling Program	Ministry of Education directive that requires all public schools to offer an accelerated education “leveling” program so that children who are falling behind in school because they work can catch up.(53, 54) With DyA assistance, municipalities and district education departments of Camiri, El Alto, Mojocoya, Pailon, and San Julian have plans of action, timetables and the resources to operate the leveling, multi-grade, after-school, and technical high school programs. Implementation started in January 2013 and continued to expand in 2014.(55)
Bolivian Foreign Trade Institute’s (IBCE) Triple Seal Initiative (El Instituto Boliviano de Comercio Exterior Triple Sello)	MOL collaboration with the Bolivian Institute of Standardization and Quality (IBNORCA), UNICEF, and the ILO to develop a voluntary certification program to recognize companies that comply with Bolivian law and ILO conventions regarding child labor, forced labor, and worker discrimination in the production of their goods. (13, 15, 41, 56) In Santa Cruz, Triple Seal Alliance works to diminish child labor under the joint UNICEF and Departmental Government of Santa Cruz Let’s Team Up (Hagamos Equipo) Campaign.(57) Implements the Triple Seal certification program that recognizes sugarcane producers who do not use child labor. In 2014, one sugarcane company, accounting for approximately 40 percent of the sugar market, was operating with the certification; three more companies were working toward their certification.(15)
Regional Action Group for the Americas (Grupo de Acción Regional para las Américas)	Conducts prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(58-60)
Ministry of Education/ Plurinational Public Management School (Escuela de Gestión Pública Plurinacional, EGPP)	EGPP training program required for public officials, including from the MOL and the Ministry of Education, that prepares them for public service. Contains a child labor module developed in 2013 in collaboration with the ÑPK project, which is a permanent part of the program.(55, 61) In 2014, MOL inspectors were trained by the EGPP with funding from UNICEF.(15)
UNICEF Bolivia Country Program (2013–2017)	Seeks to ensure the equitable provision of social services to children and protect children’s rights, including increased access to and completion of education. Aims to provide special attention to indigenous children, including the development of strategic policies, and educational and professional programs in indigenous languages.(62, 63)
Program to Protect the Rights of Children and Adolescents*	Government collaboration with UNICEF in 17 Bolivian chestnut and sugarcane-producing municipalities to provide education assistance, with funding from the Government of Italy and the Swiss Cooperation Agency. Program seeks to improve living conditions of 2,300 families and reintegrate 3,400 children in school.(62)
Human Rights of Children and Adolescents in Sugarcane Harvesting, Brazil Nut Processing, and Mining‡	Human Rights Ombudsman’s Office program to combat worst forms of child labor that promotes effective, sustainable policies and actions for the gradual elimination of the worst forms of child labor, along with labor and social protection for working adolescents between ages 14 and 17. Launched in April 2013 in Bermejo (Tarija), Cerro Rico (Potosí), and Riberalta (Beni).(64) DyA project participated in preparatory meetings and provided guidance for the design. In 2014, in the Department of Santa Cruz, a commission consisting of a representative from the departmental Government, a representative from the Office of the Child Advocate, and a representative from the Hagamos Equipo departmental anti-child labor NGO network inspected 583 of the approximately 4,000 existing sugarcane production plantations. Inspections found that more than 80 percent of the audited plantations no longer use child labor.(65)

Program	Description
Child Trafficking Awareness-Raising Campaigns	Government program in collaboration with the Bolivian Network for the Fight against Human Trafficking and Smuggling to conduct public awareness and education campaigns to educate the public, including youth and children, about the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling. Targeted more than 3,000 professionals including judicial administrators, members of the Public Ministry, public defenders, departmental SEDEGES officials, and civil society organizations.(24) Under the program, the Plurinational Council partnered with UNICEF to publish a guide for children, youth, and adults explaining the new anti-TIP law. The partnership also created a children's cell phone game to teach children about the dangers of trafficking.(24)
Student Documentation Program†	Government's General Service of Personal Identification's Civil Registration Service program to provide documentation to 1.7 million undocumented students.(23)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Bolivia.

Although Bolivia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem, particularly in the production of Brazil nuts and sugarcane, ranching and cattle raising, mining, domestic work and street work, and commercial sexual exploitation. While the Juancito Pinto subsidy program continues to expand, reports indicate that the $28 subsidy is insufficient to meaningfully cover costs associated with attending school, such as transportation and school supplies. For example, reports indicate that costs associated with attending school in rural Sucre may reach $141 per year, while costs in La Paz's sister city, El Alto, may reach as high as $410 per year.(15)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bolivia (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that minimum age protections are extended to all children under 14 years, including in self-employment, and establish a list of occupations constituting light work, as well as the number of hours permitted in light work, for children ages 12 to 14.	2014
	Ensure the law prohibits children under the age of 14 from participating in apprenticeships.	2010 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure that there is an Office of the Child Advocate with sufficient resources in every municipality to ensure that legal protections are extended to all children who are permitted to work, and coordinate the provision of services to children who are rescued from child labor, including its worst forms.	2014
	Provide sufficient funding and training to increase the capacity of the MOL and the Bolivian National Police to ensure effective enforcement of child labor laws.	2013 – 2014
	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, and ensure the number of labor inspections is adequate.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure that general labor inspectors conduct unprompted inspections in all sectors and geographical areas.	2011 – 2014
	Collect and make publicly available statistics on child labor for all regions, including the number of inspections, number of children found in child labor as a result of inspections, prosecutions, sentences, and penalties applied.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Collect and make publicly available information about the number of investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor, the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and the penalties applied.	2013 – 2014
	Collect and make publicly available statistics on trafficking cases disaggregated by adults and children.	2011 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Coordination	Ensure that NGOs participate in the Plurinational Council against Human Trafficking and Smuggling, as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.	2014
	Ensure that all department-level Councils against Human Trafficking are fully operational as required by the Comprehensive Law against Human Trafficking and Smuggling.	2014
	Reconvene the CNEPTI and develop concrete mechanisms to improve coordination among participating agencies and organizations.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that all the MOL's departmental sub-commissions designed to combat child labor convene and receive sufficient resources to carry out their function.	2014
Government Policies	Establish and implement a new National Plan for the Progressive Eradication of Child Labor.	2010 – 2014
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the national educational and development plans.	2013 – 2014
Social Programs	Conduct the national child labor survey mandated by the Child and Adolescent Code (Law 548) to inform policies and programs to eliminate child labor.	2014
	Expand national programs to increase secondary school attendance and support the implementation of the Avelino Siñani-Elizardo Pérez Education Law, which guarantees equal educational opportunities for all children, including those who fall behind in school because they work.	2010 – 2014
	Assess the impact that the Juancito Pinto subsidy program and the Program to Protect the Rights of Children and Adolescents may have on child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Increase the amount of the Juancito Pinto subsidy provided to school children to ensure they are able to cover the costs associated with attending school.	2014
	Expand social programs to address the worst forms of child labor in areas where hazardous child labor exists, particularly in the production of Brazil nuts and sugarcane, ranching and cattle raising, mining, domestic work and street work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government strengthened human trafficking victim identification efforts, tripling the number of victims identified from the previous year. In addition to allocating $1.8 million for implementation of the Decade of Roma Inclusion Action Plan, the Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees (MHRR) also continued collaborating with NGOs on a project aimed at registering Romani people for citizenship. However, children in BiH are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in begging and commercial sexual exploitation, each as a result of human trafficking. The Government does not have a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children. Additionally, the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) Government has yet to pass an anti-human trafficking amendment that would harmonize its criminal code with state-level legislation and ensure the prohibition of all forms of human trafficking across the entire country.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in begging and commercial sexual exploitation, each as a result of human trafficking. (1, 2) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in BiH. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	8.9 (44,017)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	83.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	10.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		Unavailable

Primary completion rate was unavailable from UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(3)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.(4)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Children in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) are predominantly involved in begging on the streets, often at busy intersections or near tourist attractions and religious institutions. Children are sometimes used by their parents or guardians to beg.(5, 7, 16) Organized groups also exist that traffic groups of children to lucrative locations and force them to beg.(1, 7, 17) Evidence suggests that children from the Roma community, the largest minority group in BiH, are particularly vulnerable to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(5-7, 9) The Roma custom of paid and arranged marriages between families has resulted in the exploitation of some Roma girls as domestic workers.(2, 11, 12) BiH lacks recent, comprehensive data on the extent and nature of the worst forms of child labor in the country.(5)

Many Roma children are not enrolled in school, which increases their vulnerability to involvement in the worst forms of child labor.(10, 17, 18) Sources indicate that obstacles to accessing education include discrimination by teachers and peers, long traveling distance to schools, and inability to afford appropriate clothing and food to eat during school hours.(15, 19-21) Although the Government of BiH, in collaboration with the UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR) and local NGO Vasa Prava, has made significant efforts to register undocumented individuals for citizenship. The UNHCR estimates that there are still approximately 100 people at risk of statelessness in the country.(13) Children who lack identity documents may face barriers to accessing public education. (17, 20, 22)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification

The State of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) consists of two entities—the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) and the Republika Srpska (RS)—and the self-governing Brčko District (BD).(23) Criminal laws at the state, entity, and district levels regulate issues related to the worst forms of child labor. The entities and the district are responsible for regulating labor issues.(24) The State of BiH has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

The entities of Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) and Republika Srpska (RS) and the Brčko District (BD) all prohibit the employment of minors in activities that may be harmful to their health and moral development, including work underwater, underground, and at night, with certain exceptions.(25-27) However, neither of the entities nor BD have enacted legislation that defines the types of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children in a manner that is comprehensive and specific enough to facilitate effective implementation of penalties for hazardous work violations and the removal of children from these situations.

BiH law prohibits both domestic and international trafficking in persons. However, the Governments of BiH, the entities, and BD agreed in 2011 that BiH law would be used in cases of international human trafficking, but that entity and BD laws should be adopted to cover domestic human trafficking.(28, 37) In the previous reporting period, both RS and BD adopted amendments to their Criminal Codes to prohibit all forms of human trafficking, thereby harmonizing RS and BD laws with BiH law. However, in 2014, FBiH parliament rejected a law that would criminalize human trafficking and bring the FBiH legal framework into accord with the others.(12) As a result, BiH lacks fully harmonized subnational and state laws that clearly and comprehensively prohibit trafficking in persons at all levels.(10, 12)

The Criminal Codes of BiH, FBiH, RS, and BD prohibit the commercial sexual exploitation of children through legal provisions that forbid incitement to prostitution, forced prostitution, and turning a person over to a third party for the purpose of prostitution. Despite these protections, the FBiH Law on Public Peace and Order considers prostitution a misdemeanor, which may result in minors engaged in commercial sexual exploitation being charged with a crime.(38, 39) The anti-trafficking amendment to the Criminal Code of BD penalizes the use of services provided by a child trafficked for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation, and the amended Criminal Code of RS penalizes the same offense if the perpetrator is aware that the child is a victim of human trafficking. Currently, the Criminal Code of FBiH lacks similar provisions.(28, 29, 31-33)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
FBiH Ministry of Labor and Social Policy's Federal Inspection Agency and Cantonal-Level Labor Inspectorates	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in FBiH.(12, 40)
RS Ministry of Labor and Veterans' Labor Inspectorate	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in RS.(12, 40)
BD Administrative Support Department	Enforce labor laws, including those on child labor, in BD.(12)
Entity and Cantonal-Level Police	Enforce criminal laws against trafficking, forced labor, prostitution, and begging.(37)
Ministry of Security (MoS)	Enforce national policy to prevent the worst forms of child labor. Collect data on human trafficking.(12) Ensure that victims are placed in government-approved shelters.(12)
State Investigative and Protection Agency (SIPA) and State Border Police (SBP)	Investigate human trafficking crimes and enforce anti-trafficking laws across the entire country (SIPA).(12, 37, 38) Identify trafficking victims at the border (SBP).(38)
State, Entity, and FBiH Cantonal-Level Prosecutors' Offices	Prosecute trafficking, forced labor, prostitution, and begging cases at their respective levels, based on applicable laws.(12, 37, 38)

Law enforcement agencies in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

There are approximately 113 inspectors across the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH), Republika Srpska (RS), and Brčko District (BD).(41) Officials in RS and BD indicated that these numbers are adequate and that the inspectorates have sufficient resources to carry out inspections. The FBiH Government noted that while resources are sufficient at the federation level, cantonal-level inspectorates lack financial and human resources.(12, 42) In 2014, labor inspectors did not receive training on general child labor issues, but did participate in anti-human trafficking training sessions initiated by the State Coordinator for Combatting Trafficking in Persons.(12)

All three labor inspectorates have the authority to visit any formal sector inspection site without prior supervisory approval, and typically 30 percent of these inspections are unannounced.(12) Inspectorates carry out both routine and complaint-driven visits.(40) If the inspectorates discover violations of child labor law, they have the power to assess administrative penalties or issue fines up to $623 (1,000 Bosnia-Herzegovina KM).(12) Authorities confirmed that they did not find any cases of child labor in 2014, but noted that the labor inspectorate does not have the authority to inspect the informal sector, including the street, where most child labor is known to occur.(42) Consequently, no penalties or citations were issued.(12)

During the reporting period, Centers for Social Welfare located throughout the country made efforts to identify children working on the street and to provide them with social services. In Sarajevo, an institutionalized Mobile Team, with a staff of three individuals, engaged in daily outreach to children on the streets and to families in vulnerable communities. Additionally, in December 2014, the State Coordinator finalized a process to incorporate labor inspectors into the National Referral Mechanism for victims of human trafficking.(13) In cases in which a child is engaged in exploitative labor that is not as a result of human trafficking, the Government lacks a specific referral mechanism between agencies responsible for labor law enforcement and the Center for Social Welfare.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, police and prosecutors at various levels of the Government were responsible for investigating human trafficking crimes and compiling information about them through the multiagency Strike Force for Combatting Trafficking in Persons and Organized Illegal Migration (Anti-Trafficking Strike Force).(12) Approximately 60 investigators, police inspectors, prosecutors, and judges received some training on child labor trafficking through two workshops organized by the U.S. Embassy's Office of Overseas Prosecutorial Development, Assistance and Training (OPDAT), with assistance from the Department of the State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons (State Coordinator).(12, 13) During the reporting period, the State Coordinator worked to institutionalize basic courses on preventing and combating human trafficking into the training regime at all three of the country's police academies.(13) A government official acknowledged that while judges and prosecutors receive some basic training on human trafficking through the Agency for Education and Training, more training is needed, especially regarding how to properly prosecute cases involving child begging as a result of human trafficking.(13, 43)

Criminal investigations and prosecutions of human trafficking cases were carried out at both the subnational and national levels. In BD, the Prosecutor's Office investigated one potential human trafficking violation involving six suspects, but information is not available on the outcome of the investigation.(12) RS law enforcement also investigated one case of child trafficking, which resulted in the conviction and sentencing of an individual under entity-level law.(12) Although FBiH law does not include anti-trafficking provisions, eight suspects were brought before the court under charges of Enticement to Prostitution. Of the eight, the court acquitted two, convicted two with suspended sentences, and convicted and sentenced four to prison terms of 1 to 2 years.(12) At the national level, state law enforcement officials and the State Prosecutor's Office filed a total of nine criminal reports against 14 trafficking-in-persons suspects, but none of the alleged perpetrators were convicted during the reporting period.(12) The Government acknowledged that it does not collect and publish data indicating which of these crimes involved children.(43)

The Government made a significant improvement in victim identification during the reporting period, reporting 37 child trafficking victims in 2014 as opposed to 9 in 2013.(41) Of the total child trafficking victims identified, 24 girls were subject to commercial sexual exploitation, forced marriage, or forced begging. All the male child victims identified were engaged in forced begging.(12, 41) Through the National Referral Mechanism, these child victims were referred to government-funded shelters and assistance programs.(12, 37) The National Referral Mechanism is monitored by four multidisciplinary regional monitoring teams in Banja Luka, Mostar, Sarajevo, and Tuzla, which are responsible for ensuring quality victim protection.(8, 12) In December 2014, the State Coordinator finalized a process to incorporate labor inspectors into the National Referral Mechanism.(13) However, it is also not clear what impact this will have on assisting child victims of labor exploitation, as child labor occurs almost exclusively in the informal sector, which is outside their inspection mandate.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Department of the State Coordinator for Combatting Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of the State Coordinator for Combatting Trafficking in Persons within the Ministry of Security (MOS)	Coordinate human trafficking victim protection efforts among relevant ministries at the entity level, as well as prosecutors at the state, entity, and local levels.(6, 38) Oversee the trafficking in persons database, which includes data from NGOs, the State Investigative and Protection Agency (SIPA), the State Border Police (SBP), and police agencies and Prosecutors' Offices at all levels.(37) Oversee shelter management and monitor NGOs' compliance with the agreed-upon provisions on victims' assistance.(37)
Strike Force for Combatting Trafficking in Persons and Organized Illegal Migration (Anti-Trafficking Strike Force)	Coordinate human trafficking investigations across government agencies.(13) Convene once a month, with additional meetings scheduled as needed.(43) Chaired by the Chief State Prosecutor and includes the following agencies: BiH Prosecutor's Office, State Coordinator for Combating Trafficking in Persons, Federation Prosecutor's Office, RS Prosecutor's Office, BD Prosecutor's Office, Federation Ministry of Interior, RS Ministry of Interior, SIPA, BD Police, SBP, and Federation and RS Tax Administrations.(12)
Inter-Ministerial Working Group (Monitoring Team)	Monitor implementation of the Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings and the Action Plan.(38) Comprises appointed representatives from the state and entity governments, as well as elected representatives from NGOs active in anti-human trafficking.(8)

In an effort to improve in interagency coordination on combating trafficking in persons, in 2014, the Anti-Trafficking Strike Force adopted a rulebook and work plan for 2015–2017. The goals of the work plan include raising awareness on human trafficking, and increasing cooperation among internal government agencies and with the governments of neighboring countries.(13)

The Government of BiH also maintains the Council for Children, which is responsible for coordinating children's issues among state-level agencies and institutions under the Action Plan for Children of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Although the Council may address issues related to the worst forms of child labor, research did not find evidence that it functions as a mechanism to specifically coordinate efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor in BiH.(44, 45)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Decade of Roma Inclusion (2005–2015) and Action Plan (2013–2016)*	Aims to improve the socioeconomic status and social inclusion of Roma. Joint initiative of 12 European countries, with BiH serving its rotation as Decade President in 2014.(6, 19, 37) In 2014, the Government allocated $1.75 million to implement activities set forth in its revised Decade Action Plan for 2013–2016, including housing, education, employment, and health care initiatives for Roma.(37, 38, 46)
Action Plan for Children of Bosnia and Herzegovina (2011–2014)*	Seeks to enhance institutional capacity, cross-sectoral cooperation, and coordination at all government levels to create favorable conditions for children and families, as well as to promote social inclusion of children and their general well-being.(2, 5)

Policy	Description
Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings and Action Plan (2013–2015)	Focuses on comprehensive support, prevention, victim protection and assistance, criminal prosecution, and international cooperation. Follows international standards set by the Council of Europe Convention on Actions Against Trafficking in Human Beings and the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.(38, 47) Implemented and monitored by a team of representatives from the Ministry of Security, Ministry of Justice, Ministry for Human Rights and Refugees, Ministry of Civil Affairs, High Judicial and Prosecutorial Council, and NGOs.(6, 37)
Action Plan for Child Protection and Prevention of Violence against Children through Information-Communications Technologies (2014–2015)†	Aims to develop efficient mechanisms to protect children from exploitation in child pornography and other forms of sexual exploitation through information and communications technology.(13) Includes 40 activities in the categories of legislation, institutional capacities and cooperation, and prevention.(48) Developed as part of BiH's commitments under the Global Alliance Against Child Sexual Abuse Online initiative.(8)
Policy for the Protection of Children Deprived of Parental Care and Families at Risk of Separation in FBiH (2006–2016) and Action Plan (2013–2016)*	Calls for the development of social protection systems to provide sufficient protection to children without parental care and children separated from their parents.(2)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although some progress has been made toward improving conditions for the Roma population through the Decade of Roma Inclusion, sources indicate that the Government has not allocated adequate financial resources for effective implementation of inclusive education initiatives.(21, 49-51)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees (MHRR) Funding*‡	$2.1 million Roma assistance project funded by the Ministry of Human Rights and Refugees (MHRR) and various donors and implemented by MHRR and 23 NGOs.(6) Aims to address issues related to housing, health care, and employment for Roma people.(41)
Registration Project*	UN Refugee Agency-funded project implemented by MHRR and NGO Vasa Prava that promotes registration of Roma people to increase their access to social benefits and to enable Roma children to enroll in schools.(12, 52) Since its initiation in July 2009, has helped 1,300 Roma individuals to register for citizenship and has enabled 19,000 individuals to apply for social inclusion programs.(41, 44)
Daily Centers and Crisis Centers‡	Center for Social Welfare-supported and NGO-operated long- and short-term day care centers for vulnerable children, especially those who live or work on the street.(38, 44) Provide direct assistance for children, including educational activities, counseling, food, and hygiene.(7, 18) Daily Centers operate in nine locations across the country. In four locations, NGOs also maintain Crisis Centers to provide protection to children found in exploitative labor situations who need emergency access to accommodation and social services.(16) In 2014, the Sarajevo Daily Center assisted 178 at-risk children and 21 potential child trafficking victims.(7, 41)
Enhancing the Social Protection and Inclusion System for Children in BiH (2008–2015)‡	EU-funded program implemented by UNICEF, government ministries, and NGOs, that seeks to improve social protection systems at all levels of Government, strengthen the capacity of government agencies to provide for social protection and inclusion of children, and enhance coordination and communication between providers of social services and the responsible authorities at the local level.(53)
Assistance for Trafficking Victims‡	Government program that allocates small grants to local NGOs for the provision of shelter and social services to victims of human trafficking. In 2014, MHRR distributed $34,000 (60,000 KM) to assist domestic victims, while the Ministry of Security (MOS) distributed $68,000 (120,000 KM) to assist foreign victims.(13) Services include counseling, educational assistance, and job training for domestic victims, as well as visa provision and legal services for foreign victims of human trafficking.(13) In 2014, 14 potential child trafficking victims accessed services in shelters.(41)

Program	Description
Implementation of the Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings (2013–2015)‡	$409,630 USAID and Government-funded project to implement the new Strategy to Counter Trafficking in Human Beings. Activities include conducting research to estimate the extent of trafficking in the country, strengthening the capacity of institutions to investigate and prosecute cases of human trafficking and to assist victims, and raising public awareness of human trafficking issues within the framework of the Strategy.(37, 54) In 2014, the State Coordinator signed an agreement with USAID to receive $285,000 for the Strategy's implementation.(13)
Fight Against Trafficking in Human Beings and Organized Crime—Phase 2 (2014–2017)†	EU-funded project implemented by the International Center for Migration Policy Development in six countries, including BiH. Aims to build the capacity of participating governments to prevent transnational organized crime, particularly trafficking in persons, by providing policy, legal, and technical assistance.(55) Focuses on improving victim identification, increasing prosecution of traffickers, and strengthening coordination among EU and non-EU stakeholders.(55)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of BiH.

As labor inspectors do not have a mandate to inspect the streets, staff from Daily Centers are often the first to identify children engaged in hazardous street work. In Sarajevo, an institutionalized Mobile Team with a staff of 3 individuals engages in daily outreach to children on the streets and to families in vulnerable communities.(9) However, Mobile Team staff stated that they lack sufficient resources for their work, especially in terms of reliable transportation.(7) Government support for outreach to street children in areas outside of Sarajevo varies significantly depending on the location. While the majority of Daily Centers collaborate with local Centers for Social Welfare, most Daily Centers are not institutionalized, and therefore lack consistent government financial and technical support.(16) This may limit the ability of Daily Centers to identify and assist children working on the streets. Research also found that although the Government provides some social services for low-income families through the Center for Social Welfare, many families do not receive enough assistance to reduce their reliance on child labor, especially begging, as a source of income.(7)

Government officials noted that although the number of domestic human trafficking victims identified in BiH is significantly higher than the number of foreign human trafficking victims identified, Government funding is disproportionately allocated to assisting foreigners. As a result, some organizations providing services to victims of domestic trafficking may lack adequate financial resources.(8, 45)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Bosnia and Herzegovina (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws exist in all entities that clearly and comprehensively describe the hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children.	2009 – 2014
	Adopt the proposed amendment to harmonize the State and Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina criminal laws to explicitly prohibit all forms of human trafficking.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure that children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation are treated as victims rather than criminals under FBiH law.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure that FBiH law penalizes the use of services provided by a child victim of commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2014
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor at the FBiH cantonal-level and increase funding for cantonal-level inspectorates in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014
	Ensure that all children identified as engaged in child labor are referred to appropriate social services.	2013 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Increase training for prosecutors and judges on how to properly apply criminal law in cases of child labor trafficking to ensure protection of the child victim and sanctioning of the perpetrator.	2014
	Collect and publish data on the number of individuals prosecuted, convicted, and sentenced for crimes related to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, disaggregated by age and sex of the victim.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor prevention and elimination strategies into existing policies.	2010 – 2014
	Provide sufficient funding to address commitments under the Decade of Roma Inclusion, especially initiatives that support access to education for Roma children.	2014
Social Programs	Collect data on children involved in the worst forms of child labor in order to enhance policymakers' ability to identify problems more accurately and to address them more effectively.	2009 – 2014
	Promote inclusive education for minority children by expanding efforts to reduce discrimination in schools, to mitigate the costs associated with education, and to assist Roma and other families at risk of statelessness to register for citizenship documentation that entitles their children to access to school.	2011 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs have on child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Institutionalize and provide sufficient funding for Daily Centers to ensure that they have the resources and technical support necessary to assist children involved in child labor and those who are at risk of involvement.	2014
	Strengthen social protection programs that provide support to economically vulnerable families in order to reduce their reliance on child labor.	2014
	Ensure that funding for the assistance of human trafficking victims is distributed to more adequately meet the needs of domestic victims.	2014

In 2014, Botswana made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Anti-Human Trafficking Bill which criminalizes and penalizes perpetrators that engage in trafficking of children. The Government continued its Stay-in-School Program which trains teachers and social workers on how to talk to parents about the importance of education. However, children in Botswana continue to engage in child labor in cattle herding in rural areas and domestic service in urban centers. Key gaps remain in the country's legal framework against child labor, and enforcement of existing laws is insufficient.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Botswana are engaged in child labor, including in cattle herding. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Botswana. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		94.7

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2009, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(5)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2014.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming activities, including cattle herding* (1-4)
Services	Street work,* including vending* (7)
	Domestic work* (1-4, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor on farms and cattle posts* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 9)
	Commercial sexual exploitation* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (4, 9)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Truck drivers are among those who exploit children in commercial sexual exploitation in bars and along major highways in Botswana.(4, 9)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Botswana has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Botswana

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Articles 2 and 107 of the Employment Act (10)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 2 and 110 of the Employment Act (10)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 2 and 108 of the Employment Act (10)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 2 and 71 of the Employment Act; Article 262 of the Penal Code (10, 11)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 175 of the Penal Code; Section 114 of the Children's Act (11, 12)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 25 and 57-59 of the Children's Act (12)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Section 60 of the Children's Act (12)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Section 17 of the Botswana Defense Force Act (13)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Revised National Policy in Education, White Paper No: 12 of 1994(7)

*No conscription (14)

In 2014, the Government passed comprehensive anti-human trafficking legislation, the Anti-Human Trafficking Bill, that criminalizes trafficking of children.(15) The Employment Act establishes the minimum age for employment at 15 and allows children age 14 to engage in light work.(10, 16) The minimum age protections in the Employment Act do not apply to children who work without a contract, and therefore do not apply to children doing domestic work. Although the Employment Act prohibits hazardous underground work for children less than 18 years, the law fails to prohibit hazardous work in other child labor prevalent sectors such as in agriculture. (10)However, limited evidence suggests that the Government has made efforts to compile a comprehensive list of hazardous occupations in recent years, but it has yet to be approved.(17-19) Although Section 60 of the Children's Act prohibits the use of children in the production and trafficking of drugs it does not prohibit the use of children in other illicit activities such as gang related activities. Research found no laws making education compulsory but the Government reported to UNESCO that education is compulsory for children up to age 16.(4, 20) Although primary school education is free, secondary school costs between $38 and $43 per year.(21) The law provides that children from poor families are exempted from paying school fees and shall receive free meals, toiletries, and school uniforms.(1, 4, 21) There is no compulsory age for education. The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Home Affairs' (MOLHA) Department of Labor	Enforce child labor laws and policies. In the case of the Commissioner of Labor, authorized to end employment relationships involving children.(1, 4, 10, 17, 22) In the case of the Labor Inspection Unit under the Commissioner of Labor's Office, enforce the Employment Act by performing labor inspections in workplaces that are suspected of violating child labor laws.(1, 4, 10, 17, 22)
District and Municipal Council Child Welfare Divisions	Enforce child labor laws at the local levels.(1, 17, 23)
Ministry of Defense, Justice, and Security (MDJS)	Monitor suspected human trafficking cases.(24)

Law enforcement agencies in Botswana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Home Affairs (MOLHA) employed 55 labor inspectors but they received no child labor trainings during the year.(15) Also, the MOLHA has stated that it does not have enough labor inspectors to address child labor in rural areas.(1, 17, 23) Labor inspectors are authorized to issue penalties for labor violations; the penalty is $150 or 12 months in prison or both. (15) The MOLHA allocated $55,555 for allowances to support labor inspector needs outside of salaries. The District Councils were also allocated a discretionary fund for specific district needs that allowed for the allocation of funds to labor inspectors to acquire necessary resources, such as a vehicle, to facilitate inspections. (15) The Government reported that it conducted 1,378 labor inspections, including child labor inspections, during the year. However, research did not find information on the number of unannounced visits conducted during the year. (15)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, research did not find information on the number of child labor criminal investigators, number of investigations conducted, or the number of prosecutions and convictions.(15) Despite significant efforts in past years including increases in training to address trafficking in Botswana, it has been reported that deficiencies in the way police handle cases of violence against women and children (e.g., targeting women in prostitution but not procurers or accomplices, as well as a lack of centralized referral systems and sufficient sensitization and investigative skills) constrain their ability to identify, prosecute, and prevent trafficking. (18, 23, 24)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee	Establish a reporting and referral mechanism for children subject to trafficking. Created by the Anti-Human Trafficking Bill (2014). (15)
Advisory Committee on Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to address child labor. Include representatives from government agencies, various NGOs, worker federations, and employer organizations.(2, 4, 17)
Child Labor Committees	Identify child laborers at the village level. Include social workers, local school teachers, members of the Village Development Committees, which are local government structures; labor inspectors and community leaders, including chiefs and local priests.(3, 21)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Botswana has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Botswana

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Kinds of Child Labor	Outlines the Government's plan to address legislation and policy gaps by raising awareness, developing programs to address child labor, and providing training on child labor and the worst forms of child labor to relevant stakeholders and implementers.(15)
National Plan of Action for Orphans and Vulnerable Children (OVC)*	Outlines the Government's response to challenges faced by orphans and vulnerable children by developing and implementing strategic policy plans, including Vision 2016, the 2010 National Development Plan (NDP 10), and the Second National Strategic Framework (NSF II). Facilitates operational planning and encourages the development of communication tools among key players. Provides long-term planning objectives for child protection and facilitates the implementation of the Children's Act and other regulations related to the needs of orphans and vulnerable children. (25)
Presidential Task Group on Long-Term Vision for Botswana's Vision 2016 Strategy*	Acknowledges that parents sometimes intentionally choose not to send their children to school. Works to provide universal access to school and help improve families' socioeconomic conditions so that children in poor and rural areas are no longer viewed as essential sources of labor and income. (26)
UN Development Assistance Framework (2010-2016)	Includes the goal of reducing child labor to help create a protective and supportive environment for children. (27) Supports reducing child labor to help create a protective and supportive environment for children.(27)
Botswana National Youth Policy and National Action Plan for Youth*	Addresses issues affecting youth, such as abuse and access to education. Includes Government funded programs and nationwide seminars to encourage youth entrepreneurship. (21, 28, 29)
MOLHA Sustainability Plan	Aims to improve the daily operations of labor inspectors, to include child labor inspections. The plan mostly includes local leaders and volunteers who identify and refer cases of child labor to social workers.(30) Charges schools with monitoring school attendance to promote retention.(30)
Ministry and Department Action Plans	Outlines plans to increase efforts to address child labor by the Ministry of Education, the Department of Social Services, and the Police.(31) Includes implementation strategies by the Ministry of Gender and Child Welfare that include safety and protection of children and identify and helping vulnerable children in need.(31)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Botswana funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms. (Table 8)

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (DWCP) (2011-2015)	ILO DWCP for Southern Africa that focuses on employment creation, social protection, tripartism, social dialogue, and workers' rights. Addresses HIV/AIDS and child labor issues through addressing socioeconomic issues.(31, 32)
Stay-in-School Program*‡	Government program that trains teachers and social workers to communicate with parents about the importance of education.(1, 17)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Botswana.

Although Botswana has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, including in domestic work and livestock herding.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Botswana (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure prohibitions on hazardous occupations for children under 18 years in all relevant sectors.	2009 – 2014
	Prohibit the use of children in all illicit activities such as gang related activities.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure that the law's minimum age protections apply to children working without a contract.	2010 – 2014
	Ensure free education for all children and make education compulsory until at least the minimum age of employment.	2010 – 2014
Enforcement	Make information publicly available on the funding levels, number of investigations and outcomes of cases, and ensure that adequate resources are available to enforce child labor laws throughout the whole country.	2012 – 2014
	Ensure police officers are adequately trained to identify perpetrators of violations of anti-human trafficking laws to facilitate prosecution and conviction of those who violate anti-human trafficking laws.	2011 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the 1996 Botswana National Youth Policy (NYP) and 2001 National Action Plan for Youth, and other policies on child labor.	2011 – 2014
Social Programs	Develop programs to address child labor in domestic work and cattle herding.	2012 – 2014
	Conduct research on child labor, including its worst forms, to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing social programs, such as the Stay-in- School Program, have on child labor.	2014

In 2014, Brazil made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government created mobile inspection units to coordinate child labor law enforcement efforts between regional Ministry of Labor and other local inspectors. Law 12.978 was signed; it specifies penalties in the Penal Code for the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Inspectors carried out inspections targeting child labor in 165 commercial establishments in the state of Bahia during Brazil's Carnival season in February, and in many tourist sites during the World Cup in June. The National Education Plan was also signed, and an additional 9 million schools participated in the More Education (Mais Educação) program. However, children are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Some local governments lack adequate resources to fully implement national programs to combat child labor, including programs to combat child trafficking.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Brazil are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-5)

In 2014, the 2012–2013 National Household Survey results indicated that there were 486,000 child laborers (ages 5 to 17) in Brazil. This figure represents a 15 percent reduction in child labor, providing the lowest estimate of child labor in Brazil's history. (54) Results also indicate that 96 percent of working children attended school.(6) More than 258,000 children ages 10 to 17 work in domestic service in third-party homes.(5) However, National Household Survey results exclude many vulnerable populations. The Government has not conducted in-depth research on hard-to-reach populations, such as children engaged in domestic work, drug trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, or labor in indigenous communities. In 2014, the Federal Highway Police, the NGO Childhood Brazil, and the ILO mapped out 1,969 risk points for the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Brazil. The southeastern and northeastern regions of Brazil were identified as having the most risk points.(7, 8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Brazil.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of apples,† Palm used to produce oil (babassu),† beans,† cashews,† citrus,† coffee,† corn,† cocoa,† cotton,† manioc,† mate tea,† pineapple,† rice,† sisal,† sugarcane,† tobacco,† tomatoes,† charcoal,† and strawberries*† (11-39)
	Cattle ranching† and animal slaughter,† including for beef production† (11, 40, 41)
	Mollusk harvesting*† (24, 42)
Industry	Production of ceramic† and brick† (43-45)
	Production of garments,† footwear,† and leather† (25, 31, 38, 45-47)
	Work in quarries*† (48, 49)
Services	Street work,† including vending, and begging (5, 50)
	Garbage scavenging† (23, 50)
	Automobile washing and repair† (25, 38, 51)
	Work in markets,*† hauling fruits and vegetables (25, 51)
	Artistic work and playing in soccer clubs* (52-54)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Domestic work† (5, 55)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-4)
	Domestic work, begging, and playing in soccer clubs as a result of human trafficking*† (1, 56, 57)
	Used in illicit activities, including drug trafficking,*† sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 5)
	Forced labor in the production of manioc*† (14)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In Brazil, human trafficking is a problem in border areas. Brazilian and Paraguayan indigenous children are trafficked for domestic service; Paraguayan indigenous children are trafficked for the purpose of begging; adolescents, including some from Haiti and South Korea, are trafficked to play in soccer clubs.(1, 56)

While there are no overall statistics available, the commercial sexual exploitation of children is a large problem throughout Brazil, especially in tourist areas in the cities of Fortaleza, Manaus, Rio de Janeiro, and in the slums (favelas) of Rio de Janeiro.(58) Highway stops are areas for the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Young girls are victims of commercial sexual exploitation at rest-stop bars in Caracará, a highway stop on the route from Manaus, Brazil to Venezuela.(4)

Reports indicate that every day, on average, eight primary and secondary schools close in rural areas. In 2013, approximately 3,300 schools had closed because of high costs and infrastructure problems.(59, 60) In the last 5 years, at least 13,000 schools have closed for the same reason.(61)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Brazil has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 7, Title II of the Constitution; Article 403 of the Labor Code (62, 63)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 7, Title II of the Constitution; Article 2 of Decree 6.481 of 2008 (62, 64)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Decree 6.481 of 2008 (64)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 149 of the Penal Code (65)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 231-A of the Penal Code (65, 66)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 218-B and 227–228 of the Penal Code; Articles 240–244A of the Statute of the Child and Adolescent (65, 67)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 4 of Decree No. 6.481 of 2008; Articles 33–40, Chapter II of Law 11.343 of 2006 (64, 68)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 5 of Law 4.375 of 1964 (69)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	17	Article 5 of Law 4.375 of 1964 (69)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17	Article 208 of the Constitution (62)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 208 of the Constitution (62)

Although Brazil's legal minimum age for work is higher than the international standard, it includes an exemption for apprenticeships to begin at age 14. As of 2013, the labor justice system has sole authority to grant work permits, which includes authorizations for children ages 14 and 15 to work in apprenticeships.(70, 71) In 2014, the courts and the Public Ministry in the state of São Paulo issued recommendations to judges regarding granting work authorizations for children under 16.(72)

Brazil's definition of forced labor, which is broader than that of the ILO Conventions, includes strenuous work and unacceptable or degrading working conditions as a form of forced labor. However, the Penal Code's definition of trafficking in persons does not cover human trafficking for the purposes of labor, and only penalizes human trafficking cases in which the victim has been moved.(65, 66) Resolution 93 of 2010 allows officials to grant permanent visa status to foreign victims of human trafficking or labor exploitation, including of commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, and indentured labor.(73) A new amendment to the Constitution, Amendment 81, which was approved on June 5 of 2014, permits the confiscation of urban or rural properties in which forced or slave labor is found, but it requires regulations in order to be implemented.(74)

On May 21, 2014, Law 12.978 was signed, changing the legal title of Article 218-B of the Penal Code to further specify that children and adolescents are protected as vulnerable people from commercial sexual exploitation. The penalty for this crime is 4 to 10 years in prison and the crime cannot be expunged from the perpetrator's record.(75) On August 4, 2014, Law 6742/2014 was passed in Rio de Janeiro, specifying the City Government's plan for eradicating the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents, which entails the creation of public policies and interagency coordination, research, and awareness-raising campaigns, as well as increasing victim protection rights.(76)

On December 1, 2014, the Government signed Decree 13.046, which alters Law No. 8.069 (the Child Statute), stipulating that all public and private entities who work in child care must have trained professionals who can identify and report suspected situations of abuse of children and adolescents.(77)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Employment (MTE)	Conduct labor inspections, enforce child and forced labor laws, and monitor child and forced labor cases.(25) Labor inspections are planned by regional offices based on MTE's goals, analyses of labor market data, and available human and financial resources.(78) Has special units composed of labor inspectors, the Federal Police, and federal labor prosecutors, to conduct forced labor inspections.(25) Work with the Ministry of Justice and other government agencies when they find foreign workers who have been trafficked and work under forced labor conditions.(79) In 2014, created the Mobile Inspection Group to Combat Child Labor, which promotes initial connections and coordinates with child protection networks about activities against child labor and the worst forms of child labor, along with regional MTE representatives, and also with the MTE, the State Prosecutor, Child Protection councils, and City Halls.(57)
Federal Labor Prosecutor's Office (MPT)	Prosecute child labor violations by working with 24 prosecutors from the National Committee to Combat Child and Adolescent Labor, (COORDINFÂNCIA), an in-house body that directs the MPT's efforts to combat child labor.(80, 81) Carry out awareness-raising campaigns. Monitor whether child labor policies are implemented and whether municipalities budget the required 5 percent for initiatives to protect children's rights.(25, 81, 82)
Federal Police	Investigate some cases of forced labor, human trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(25)
Federal Public Ministry (MPF)	Investigate and prosecute cases of forced labor and human trafficking.(23)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Lead efforts to combat human trafficking. Oversees state-run centers (núcleos) for addressing local anti-trafficking strategies in 16 states.(83)
Office of the President's Secretariat of Human Rights (SDH)	Coordinate efforts to protect human rights, including combating forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation. Sponsor Dial 100, a human rights violation hotline which directs complaints to appropriate institutions for follow-up.(25)
Office of the President's Secretariat for Women's Policies	Operate Dial 180, a hotline that receives complaints about violence against women.(7, 84)
Federal Highway Police	Collaborate with the MPF and MTE mobile inspection units in identifying risk points for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation, with a focus on the highway system.(85, 86)
Advanced Posts and Nucleus (Núcleos)	Refer human trafficking victims to services. Also, as of January 2014, these interagency units assisting possible human trafficking victims, at transit points now produce and publish quarterly progress reports.(83)

* Agency responsible for child labor enforcement was created during the reporting period.

Law enforcement agencies in Brazil took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Employment (MTE) had 2,711 labor inspectors who worked in all 26 states. The MTE's budget reached $29.8 billion, a $2 billion increase over its 2013 budget.(83) Reports indicate that while funding is sufficient for inspections, the number of labor inspectors is too low.(83)

During the reporting period, the MTE carried out 9,798 child labor inspections, an increase from 8,339 child labor inspections in 2013. Of the 9,798 child labor inspections, 3,241 inspections involved the worst forms of child labor.(83) No information is available on how many inspections had occurred as a result of complaints.(57) The majority of the inspections were carried out in the states of Bahia, Goiás, Minas Gerais, Pernambuco, and Rio de Janeiro. Inspectors are able to make unannounced visits and inspections take place within a large range of economic activities in both the formal and informal sectors.(83) However, inspectors are not permitted to enter private homes and family farms where child labor may be found.(83)

Prior to the start of the FIFA (soccer) World Cup in Brazil, the Government and different civil society members launched many awareness-raising campaigns about preventing the commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Office of the President's Secretariat of Human Rights (SDH) allocated approximately $3.4 million in funding for projects to fight the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(7, 87) Targeted child labor inspections also took place in the state of Bahia in 165 commercial establishments during Brazil's Carnival season, from February 24 to 26, and in many tourist sites during the FIFA World Cup, from June 12 to June 17.(88, 89) During the 2014 FIFA World Cup season, Dial 100 received 726 complaint calls related to child labor.(57) In addition, states have established mechanisms to receive child labor complaints. For example, the Secretariat for Social Development in the state of Minas Gerais receives such complaints through its human rights hotline.(83, 90)

In 2014, the MTE removed 5,522 children from child labor and removed 1,509 individuals from forced and exploitative labor conditions. No information is available on how many children were rescued from forced and exploitative labor.(83, 91) Between January and September 2014, the Pernambuco Regional Office removed 843 children and adolescents from conditions of child labor, resulting in the highest number of children found and rescued from child labor in any one state in Brazil.(92) In 2014, in two separate cases, individuals were convicted for violating child labor laws. Total fines issued for these cases were $223,474.(57) Research did not uncover how many children were referred to social services.

Criminal Law Enforcement

For 2014, no information is available on the number of investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. Research did not uncover how many investigations on the worst forms of child labor were carried out during the reporting period.

The Secretariat for Women's Policies Dial 180 hotline (renamed Disque-Denúncia in March 2014) received 485,105 calls in 2014, 140 of which were human trafficking complaints, compared with 263 complaints during the same period in 2013.(93, 94) State nucleuses reported having identified 170 victims of sex trafficking and 2,145 victims of human trafficking for the purpose of labor exploitation; many of the latter had been identified by the MTE.(7, 57) The Government does not distinguish between adult trafficking and child trafficking cases in its public reporting, so it is difficult to discern how many of these victims were children.

The Government did not report comprehensive data on human trafficking prosecutions and convictions in Brazil. However, as part of the Second National Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, there are concentrated efforts on data collection.(7) In 2014, Brazil's National Council of Justice created 15 Judicial State Committees to Combat Trafficking in Persons which aim to coordinate data sharing among the courts.(7)

There is no central database to record violations of the laws against the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including in child prostitution and pornography.(83) The Government did not report the number of children identified or rescued from commercial sexual exploitation in 2014.(57) Safernet Brazil, a partnership between the Government and an NGO, receives online complaints about human rights violations, including about child pornography and human trafficking. Safernet Brazil hosts a helpline to provide counseling support and a one-stop Web site with information about cybercrimes in Brazil.(95, 96) In 2014, Safernet received more than 189,211 complaints, 51,553 of which pertained to child pornography.(97)

Brazil faces challenges in collecting comprehensive data on human trafficking because of the lack of legislation that covers all forms of human trafficking.(98) Furthermore, most local governments lack adequate resources to combat human trafficking and assist human trafficking victims, including victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(23)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role &amp; Description
National Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (CONANDA)	Monitor policies to protect children's rights, including the rights of working children. Includes 28 sitting council members, 14 of whom are representatives from the Executive Branch and 14 are NGO representatives.(99, 100)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interagency Committee to Implement Strategies to Ensure the Protection of Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Coordinate the implementation of policies to protect children's and adolescents' rights, including the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Composed of nine government entities, including the National Council of the Federal Public Ministry and the Labor Justice Commission, and led by the SDH.(101)
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAETI)	Lead the implementation of the National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents. Coordinated by the MTE; includes 17 government agencies, as well as representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations.(102, 103)
Intersectoral Committee to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents	Monitor the implementation of the National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children. Led by the SDH.(104)
National Commission to Combat Human Trafficking	Coordinate the implementation of the Second National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking. Chaired by the MOJ.(7)
Labor Justice Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Decent Work	Direct efforts led by the Labor Courts ( Justiça do Trabalho ) to eradicate child labor.(105)
Anti-Trafficking Interagency Coordination Centers (Núcleos)	Coordinate activities carried out by local, state, and federal agencies to combat human trafficking. There are currently 16 states with coordination centers.(23)

A source indicates that state-level coordinating committees on trafficking in persons have faced challenges due to a lack of funding. The state of Pernambuco's Committee on Combating Trafficking in Persons stopped meeting in the first quarter of 2014; it officially dissolved during the reporting period due to financial and administrative setbacks.(7)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Brazil has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and the Protection of Working Adolescents (2011–2015)	Guides the Government of Brazil's efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(106, 107)
National Plan to Combat Sexual Violence Against Children and Adolescents (2011–2020)	Lays out a set of strategies to prevent sexual violence, protect children's rights, and assist child victims of sexual violence, as well as their families. Discussed throughout Brazil, harmonized with other child-related policies.(108)
National Plan for Children and Adolescents (2011–2020)	Outlines the policy framework to promote children's rights. Aims to expand and coordinate policies and actions to address child labor.(109) In January 2014, the National Council for the Rights of Children and Adolescents established guidelines for states and municipalities to develop 10-year plans for children and adolescents based on the goals and objectives of the National Plan.(110)
Second Plan to Combat Forced Labor (2012–2016)	Establishes the policy framework to address forced labor, including forced child labor.(108, 111)
Second Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2012–2016)	Guides efforts to combat human trafficking, including child trafficking.(112) Focuses on prevention, assistance to victims, and suppression of criminal activity.(83)
Decent Work National Plan and the Decent Work Agenda for Youth	Outlines policies to provide decent work opportunities and increase access to education and vocational training.(113, 114)
National Educational Plan (2014–2024)†	Aims to expand access to education and improve the quality of education. Has 20 goals, including universal basic education; an end to illiteracy; and conversion of 50 percent of public schools into full-time schools, extending the number of school hours to 7 or more per day. Under the Plan, 10 percent of Brazil's GDP will be allocated to education.(115–117)
4-Year Development Plan (2012–2015)	Seeks to achieve sustainable development that reaches all regions and promotes social equality through access to quality education, technological innovation, and environmental sustainability. Aims to lift 16 million people out of extreme poverty, and build 2 million houses for low-income families.(118)

Policy	Description
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)†	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Brazil at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(119-121)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In September 2014, Brazil participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. Held in Bridgetown, Barbados, these discussions promoted the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector, uphold workers' rights, and prevent and eliminate child labor.(122)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Brazil funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor ( Programa de Erradicação do Trabalho Infantil [PETI] )‡	Ministry of Social Development and the Fight Against Hunger (MDS) conditional cash transfer program that combats child labor by working with families who commit to keep their children in school and out of work. Beneficiaries receive tailored social services based on their needs and vulnerability.(107, 123, 124) Implemented in more than 3,500 municipalities and more than 820,000 children benefit from the program. Tracks project beneficiaries through a national monitoring system.(107, 124)
Family Grant ( Bolsa Família )‡	MDS anti-poverty program that supplements family income, targeting rural and urban areas where child labor is prevalent. One condition for family participation is that children under age 18 attend school regularly.(125, 126) In 2014, 14 million families participated, and funding for families has increased by 44 percent in the past 3 years.(127) In 2014, the budget was $8.7 billion.(83) To address noncompliance with the school attendance requirements, the Ministry of Education, the MDS, and local and state governments track school attendance every 2 months. Beginning in December 2014, the municipality of São Paulo expanded the program to include foreign recipients residing in the municipality.(128)
Caring Brazil Program ( Brasil Carinhoso )*‡	MDS program to combat extreme poverty among participants of Bolsa Familia, whose monthly income per capita is less than $137. Brasil Carinhoso targets families with children ages 0 to 15, and benefits 16.4 million people.(129, 130)
Brazil Without Extreme Poverty ( Brasil sem Miséria )‡	MDS program that aims to lift more than 16 million people out of extreme poverty by expanding access to social protection programs, improving productivity and providing access to basic services.(131) The budget was extended into 2015 with a 4.4 percent increase in funding.(83)
National Program on Job Training and Employment ( Programa Nacional de Acesso ao Ensino Técnico e Emprego [PRONATEC] )*‡	Ministry of Education job training and employment program for youth older than age 16. Program goal for 2014 was $5 billion, providing 8 million openings for professional courses.(132, 133) Program also included PRONATEC Cup, a special training course for the 2014 World Cup held in Brazil, which included training courses for 240,000 students, and courses for 32,000 students in sign language and in English and Spanish.(133)
More Education Program ( Mais Educação )‡	Ministry of Education educational services program. Offers after-school activities and remedial activities to reduce dropout rates and grade repetition, as well as to combat child labor. In 2014, 58,000 schools participated in the program, an increase from 49,000 schools in 2013.(127, 134, 135)
National Household Survey‡	Government-funded annual national household survey that includes child labor.(136)
South-South Cooperation Project‡	A $461,862 Government of Brazil-funded projects to combat child labor, implemented by the ILO-IPEC to promote South-South cooperation.(137) In most of the project countries in 2014, an awareness-raising campaign named Pinwheel Caravan—Africa Free of Child Labor was conducted.(142)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011–2016)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Brazil, aims to improve the evidence base on child labor and the worst forms of child labor through data collection and research.(138)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Program	Description
Project to Consolidate Efforts to Combat Forced Labor in Brazil and Peru (2012–2016)	A $6 million, USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO to combat forced labor, including forced child labor in Brazil and Peru, and to share Brazil's good practices with the Government of Peru and Peruvian stakeholders. In 2014, began to develop a monitoring tool to track the implementation of the National Plan to Combat Forced Labor, and it supported activities to promote the exchange of good practices among State Commissions to Combat Forced Labor.(139-141) Also carried out an exchange activity between the Brazilian and Peruvian Commissions to Combat Forced Labor to share good practices and develop an agenda for further information-sharing activities. In the state of Mato Grosso, will provide livelihood services to 650 victims of forced labor.(141)
Protect Brazil Smartphone Application ( Proteja Brasil )‡	Government- and UNICEF-sponsored smartphone and tablet application to report child labor abuses. Launched in 2014.(142)
Social Assistance Reference Centers	MDS and SDH program that provides vulnerable populations, including victims of child labor and human trafficking victims of commercial sexual exploitation, with psychological, social, and legal services. In 2014, there were 2,440 centers, an increase from 2,316 in 2013.(83, 143) Funding also increased to $15.2 billion in 2014 from $13.7 billion in 2013.(83) Only 557 centers were certified to assist trafficking in persons victims.(57)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Brazil.

Although the National Plan to Eradicate Child Labor (PETI) and Family Grant (Bolsa Familia) have reduced child labor in Brazil, challenges remain.(106, 144) Some PETI beneficiaries are not fully complying with program requirements; reports claim that some children do not attend school, while others combine school and work.(145, 146) Because of decentralization of PETI and Bolsa Familia, local communities are responsible for their implementation; however, they do not have the resources to fully implement and monitor the programs. Despite the increased funding from the Central Government, in some cases, the operational costs of these programs exceed the funding provided by the Federal Government or local governments lack the institutional capacity to implement them.(5, 147, 148) More than 3,200 municipalities in Brazil carry out policies and programs to combat child labor, but the Government does not have in place an effective monitoring system to track their implementation.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE CHILD LABOR, INCLUDING ITS WORST FORMS

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Brazil (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the definition of trafficking in persons is consistent with international standards.	2011 – 2014
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2014
	Make information publicly available on the number, cases of child trafficking and forced labor, including the number of rescued children, investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and children who received social services.	2012 – 2014
	Make information publicly available on the number of criminal investigators for the worst forms of child labor.	2014
	Provide adequate resources to local governments to combat human trafficking and assist victims.	2012 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Develop a monitoring system to track the implementation of child labor policies and programs.	2009 – 2014
	Make publicly available the number of children who received social services.	2014
	Expand efforts to improve access to primary and secondary education, particularly in rural areas.	2013 – 2014
	Carry out more in-depth research on the worst forms of child labor, particularly with regard to children engaged in domestic work, drug trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation, as well as child victims of forced labor and child labor in indigenous communities.	2009 – 2014
	Provide local governments with the resources and capacity to fully implement and monitor PETI and Bolsa Família , identify technical assistance needed by communities, and raise awareness.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that families participating in PETI comply with program requirements to keep children in school and out of work.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Burkina Faso made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government published a study on hazardous child labor in order to update existing legislation and established the National Coordination Committee for the National Action Plan on the Fight against the Worst Forms of Child Labor. The Government also adopted Law N° 011-2014/AN Suppressing the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, which strengthens existing prohibitions on commercial sexual exploitation of children and child pornography. However, children in Burkina Faso are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor and the lack of funding has hampered the implementation of child labor policies. Despite an uprising in October that ousted longtime President Blaise Compaoré, the Government continued to address child labor issues.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burkina Faso are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining.(1-10) According to a National Survey on Child Labor in Burkina Faso conducted in 2006, 47.7 percent of boys and 43 percent of girls ages 5 to 17 are engaged in child labor. Child labor is more prevalent in rural areas, with 44.1 percent of children engaged in child labor.(11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burkina Faso.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	42.1 (2,116,752)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	41.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	21.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		57.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(12)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Enquête Démographique et de Santé et à Indicateurs Multiples, 2010.(13)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting,* weeding,* and exposure to pesticides† in the harvesting of crops, including cotton (1-7, 9)
	Harvesting mangos* (8)
	Raising and herding livestock, including cattle* and goats* (2, 3, 6, 10)
Industry	Digging and crushing rock,* installing dynamite,† working underground,† carrying water and other heavy loads†, and using cyanide and mercury† to process ore in gold mines† (1-4, 9, 14-26)
	Quarrying† and transporting heavy loads† while working to extract granite* (17, 21, 24, 27-30)
	Construction*(10)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Domestic work (2, 3, 5, 7, 21, 30-34)
	Street work, including vending and begging (2, 3, 7, 10, 35, 36)
	Used in illicit activities,* including drug trafficking* (24, 37)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Forced labor in livestock herding* (6)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 3, 10, 18, 22, 30, 38, 39)
	Agricultural work,* including cotton production and livestock raising,* domestic work, begging, gold mining, and work in quarries,* each as a result of human trafficking (3, 4, 6, 7, 10, 21, 31, 35, 36, 39-42)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Burkina Faso is a destination, transit point, and source for child trafficking.(3, 35, 39, 42, 43) Human traffickers sometimes pose as Koranic school teachers, who force their students to beg in the streets and take the money the boys collect.(3, 7, 21, 35-37, 39, 40) The Government acknowledged the need for a national study on child prostitution in order to better understand the issue and incorporate it into the National Action Plan on the Fight against the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(42) Additionally, a recent boom in gold mining has contributed to the increase of child labor in this sector, and additional children are leaving school to work in gold mines.(6, 9, 16, 37, 44-47)

Although Law N° 013-2007/AN Orienting the Education System mandates free education until the age of 16, students are required to pay for uniforms and school-related fees.(2, 10, 30, 48) The shortage of teachers and lack of school infrastructure in rural areas hinders children’s access to education.(4, 30, 48) Birth registration is also required for enrollment, which could prevent some children from entering school since about a quarter of children do not have a birth certificate.(49-52) At school, students may suffer physical and sexual abuse from their teachers, particularly in rural areas, or they may be required to carry out household chores for teachers. This may discourage some children from attending school or reduce the time children can dedicate to learning.(53) Although the Government is working to provide education to children within refugee camps, due to the lack of resources, many refugee children do not have access to education.(54, 55)

On October 31, 2014, President Blaise Compaoré stepped down from power after protests erupted in response to his attempt to amend the Constitution to allow for another term as president.(56, 57) An interim president was declared two weeks later.(58, 59) This shift in power and subsequent transition may have impacted the Government’s ability to address child labor during the last quarter of 2014, as many government officials were replaced.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burkina Faso has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 152 of the Labor Code (60)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 149 and 150 of the Labor Code; Article 1 of Decree N° 2009-365/PRES/PM/MTSS/MS/ MASSN Hazardous Work List (60)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations and/or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Decree N° 2009-365/PRES/PM/MTSS/MS/MASSN Hazardous Work List (60, 61)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 5 and 154 of the Labor Code; Articles 3-5 of Law N° 011-2014/AN Suppressing the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (60, 62)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Article 5 of Law N° 029-2008/AN on Combatting Trafficking of Persons and Similar Practices (60, 63)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code; Articles 3-4 and 7-10 of Law N° 011-2014/AN Suppressing the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography (60, 62)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 153 of the Labor Code (60)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	20	Decree N° 2013-358/PRES/PM/MDNAC (64)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 4 of Law N° 013-2007/AN Orienting the Education System (65)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 6 of Law N° 013-2007/AN Orienting the Education System (65)

* No conscription.(66)

Article 153 of the Labor Code mandates the Hazardous Work List is issued by ministerial decree in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, as well as the National Council on Workplace Safety and Health.(60) During the reporting period, the Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS) published a study on hazardous child labor in order to update existing legislation and identified several additions.(2, 9)

On April 17, the Government adopted Law N° 011-2014/AN Suppressing the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, which strengthens existing prohibitions on commercial sexual exploitation of children and child pornography. Penalties include imprisonment of 5 to 10 years and fines between $2,700 and $5,400, with penalties doubling for repeat offenders. (2, 42, 62) Additionally, the Government drafted new mining regulations prior to the uprising in October, but the mining industry is trying to postpone revising the mining code until after a new government is in place.(4, 67) The new mining regulations would regulate artisanal mines and could provide additional protection to children working in gold mines and granite quarries.(4) The Government also drafted a comprehensive Child Protection Law, which combined elements from several laws, including the Penal Code and Labor Code. However, no action has been taken since the previous government was dissolved.(2)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Civil Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS)	Enforce labor laws, including child labor laws.(2, 68, 69) Responsible for establishing Government policy to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(37) In the case of provincial committees, responsible for awareness raising, conducting workshops for community members, and enforcement at the local level.(43, 70)

Burkina Faso

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Action and National Solidarity's (MASSN) Directorate for Child Protection and Efforts Against Violence Toward Children	Enforce laws against child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor, remove children from exploitative child labor, and provide reintegration services. (2, 69, 71) Operate a free hotline to report child abuse, including child labor, and conduct awareness raising activities in all 13 regions of Burkina Faso.(2, 10, 24, 72) Established civil registry offices in maternity wards to register newborn babies.(72, 73)
Ministry of Territorial Administration, Decentralization and Security (MATDS)	Enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor, including investigations into the commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking, child labor, and drug-related crimes.(74) In the case of the Morals Brigade within the MTADS's National Police Force, trained to deal with criminal cases involving children and women.(38)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce and prosecute criminal laws, including laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(74)
Parliamentary Network for the Promotion of Child Rights	Provide training for government officials on children's rights, including child labor laws and other issues affecting children.(4, 75, 76)

Law enforcement agencies in Burkina Faso took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the MFPTSS employed 149 labor inspectors throughout the country.(69) Although there are new inspectors being trained, the number of inspectors is lower than the 291 employed in 2014 and is insufficient to adequately monitor child labor issues.(2, 3, 37, 69) The Government provides extensive training to new labor inspectors, including a module on child labor. However, the Government acknowledges that training is insufficient and the number of inspectors who benefit from available training is limited.(69, 77) The MFPTSS did not receive funds specifically dedicated to the enforcement of child labor laws, and inspectors noted the funding level was insufficient to effectively carry out labor inspections throughout the country, particularly in artisanal mining. Research indicates that transportation is particularly challenging and there is only one vehicle in each of the regions, which is used for the Regional Director's travel as well as labor inspections.(3, 37, 69, 78) Labor inspectors staged a sit-in in June and a 2-day strike in September to protest working conditions and called on the Government to fulfil Article 392 of the Labor Code which stipulates that the Government must provide all personnel and equipment necessary for inspectors to accomplish their jobs.(2) Negotiations were stalled by the change in government and no agreement has been reached yet.(79)

Inspectors carried out unannounced visits in the informal sector, artisanal gold mines, and cotton fields in accordance with Article 397 of the Labor Code.(2, 60, 69) Inspections typically consist of planned site visits where inspectors assess compliance with labor standards and educate workers and employers on existing labor laws. Inspection teams are formed with language ability in mind since the majority of workers speak a local language rather than French.(2, 69) Inspectors are authorized to assess penalties according to Article 396 of the Labor Code.(2, 60) However, no penalties to employers have been applied to date since most children are self-employed and the MFPTSS notes that it is difficult for inspectors to follow up after inspections to ensure recommendations have been implemented.(2, 68, 78, 80) The MFPTSS publishes an annual report listing 12 types of labor infractions, but none are related to child labor. The number of investigations conducted, prosecutions, violations found, and citations issued in 2014 is not publicly available.(2) It is unknown how many complaints related to child labor were made to Ministry of Social Action and National Solidarity's (MASSN) hotline.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Government employed 265 inspectors who worked with police officers to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. However, this number is insufficient given the scope of the problem in Burkina Faso.(2, 69) The Government provided training for 200 police officers, social workers, judges, teachers, labor inspectors, traditional leaders, and religious leaders on issues related to human trafficking. Training modules included how to identify and provide assistance to victims, as well as investigation procedures and prosecution of human trafficking crimes.(42) Investigations are often conducted with social service agencies, which allows them to intervene directly on behalf of victims of exploitative child labor.(2, 69) Many provincial committees, which assist with criminal law enforcement and awareness raising at the local level, were unable to carry out all their planned activities due to a lack of resources.(70)

At least two Burkinabé women were arrested in neighboring countries for allegedly participating in a child trafficking ring and the Government is negotiating their extradition to Burkina Faso. MASSN identified 280 victims of child trafficking during the reporting period and referred all of the children to social service providers.(42) No statistics are available on the total number of prosecutions, convictions, or penalties assessed as a result of violations of child labor laws.(2)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordination Committee for the National Action Plan on the Fight against the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CNC-PAN/PFTE)	Supervise, evaluate and oversee implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Chaired by the MFPTSS's Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms.(2, 69) Includes representatives from 24 Government ministries, including the Ministries of Justice, MASSN, MTADS, Basic Education, Mines, Human Rights, and Health.(68, 74) Also includes NGOs, religious communities, the children's parliament, civil society organizations, as well as six observers representing donor countries and international NGOs.(2) Meets twice per year to review efforts to combat child labor and identify needs.(37, 69)
MFPTSS's Directorate to Combat Child Labor and its Worst Forms	Coordinate and lead interagency efforts to combat child labor, including its worst forms; collect information on child labor; and conduct awareness raising activities.(68, 78) Serve as the Secretariat for the CNC-PAN/PFTE.(68, 74)
National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance Against the Trafficking in Persons and Assimilated Practices (CVS)	Coordinate actions to combat the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking, at the national level. Oversees Committees for Vigilance and Surveillance in each of the regions. (24, 42, 43) MASSN serves as president and MTADS is the vice president.(42, 72) Includes representatives from MFPTSS, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Women and Gender, as well as NGOs.(42)

The Government issued a decree in January 2014 to improve the coordination of the National Coordination Committee for the National Action Plan on the Fight against the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CNC-PAN/PFTE). During the reporting period, the CNC-PAN/PFTE focused on how to make the best use of existing data on child labor in Burkina Faso and developed a monitoring tool to aid in the implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(2)

The National Committee for Vigilance and Surveillance Against the Trafficking in Persons and Assimilated Practices (CVS) received a budget of approximately $12,000 in 2014.(42) Although the CVS was unable to meet due to a lack of resources, its regional committees each met once and brought together police officers, social workers, NGOs, and other groups combatting human trafficking to discuss the current situation in Burkina Faso.(42, 79) A lack of computerized record keeping and limited ability to collect data from regional committees and NGOs working in the field pose challenges to the Government's efforts to combat child trafficking.(42)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Burkina Faso has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012-2015)	Based on the Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Development, aims to prevent and protect children from the worst forms of child labor through awareness raising, data collection, rehabilitation services, increased access to education, and better law enforcement.(68) Calls for the involvement of 11 ministries, particularly MASSN, MOL, and MFPTSS to reduce exploitative child labor significantly by 2015.(37, 81) Promotes education, particularly for girls, through school feeding programs, school material distribution, and scholarships.(74)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan on Child Labor (2012-2015)	With 14 other ECOWAS countries, implements a regional action plan on child labor, especially its worst forms. Aims to eliminate worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015.(34, 82, 83) In 2014, met to discuss actions taken since Ghana's 2013 Peer Review, progress of the Regional Action Plan's implementation, and the ILO's Study on Child Labor and Marginalization.(84)
Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development (SCADD) (2011-2015)*	Encompasses all development activities with a focus on the promotion of social protections, poverty reduction through economic growth, maternal and child health, and primary education for all.(37, 85) Also implements price controls on food.(37)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Policy	Description
Bilateral Agreements to Combat Child Trafficking	Agreements between Burkina Faso, Mali, and Côte d'Ivoire that call for increased cooperation against cross-border trafficking in persons.(3, 24, 73, 86-88) The Government has established monitoring committees to review aspects of the agreement with Mali and Côte d'Ivoire.(79) Burkina Faso's National Training Institute of Social Workers partners with its counterpart in Chad to share experiences and best practices in combatting human trafficking.(42)
Treaty of Amity and Cooperation†	Framework for economic cooperation between Côte d'Ivoire and Burkina Faso. Includes agreements to prevent the exploitation of children in artisanal gold mines and renewed commitments to combat child trafficking between the two countries.(88) Includes annual meetings to reaffirm the commitment and address issues requiring cooperation.(88)
Decent Work Country Program (2012-2015)	Promotes decent work with a focus on creating job opportunities for youth and promoting social protection. Incorporates child labor concerns into the strategy for work.(89)
Ministry of Youth, Vocational Training, and Employment's Action Plan (2012-2014)*	Calls for the construction of 45 vocational training centers and a central vocational training center for each region.(90)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Following his fall from power, former President of Burkina Faso Blaise Compaoré has been living in Côte d'Ivoire, which has strained relations with the transitional Government of Burkina Faso. As a result, the monitoring committee established to review the agreement between Burkina Faso and Côte d'Ivoire has not met.(79)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Burkina Faso funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Reducing Child Labor Through Education and Services (2012-2016)	$5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Counterpart International that targets 10,000 children engaged in or at risk of entering child labor in the production of cotton and in gold mining.(91, 92) Aims to increase access to education, social protection, and training programs. Also targets 1,000 households of child beneficiaries with livelihood services.(91, 92)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011-2016)	$15 million USDOL-funded 6-year project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor.(93)
Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labor II (CLEAR II)†	USDOL-funded capacity building project implemented by Winrock International and partners Verité and Lawyers Without Borders in at least eight countries to build local and national capacity of the Government to address child labor. Aims to improve legislation addressing child labor issues, including by bringing local or national laws into compliance with international standards; improve monitoring and enforcement of laws and policies related to child labor; develop, validate, adopt, and implement a National Action Plan on the elimination of child labor; and enhance the implementation of national and local policies and programs aimed at the reduction and prevention of child labor.(94)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation Through ECOWAS I & II	USDOL-funded regional projects that supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region by providing policy and capacity building support for all ECOWAS states.(95, 96)
Quarrying and Mining Child Labor Project	UNICEF-funded project implemented in five regions by Terre des Hommes and the Government of Burkina Faso.(24, 68) Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in quarries and mines by raising awareness and providing school materials to children to encourage student retention.(97, 98) Also provides vocation training to youth and income-generating activities and nursery schools for female-headed households.(4, 26, 34, 97, 98).

Program	Description
Transit Centers‡	Government program that operates 23 transit centers serving vulnerable children, some of whom were victims of human trafficking.(42, 73) Provides food, medical assistance, and psychosocial care and aims to reintegrate victims back into their communities. Facilitates repatriation of foreign victims when possible. (24, 42, 71)
Assistance to Vulnerable Groups‡	MASSN-funded program that provides services to vulnerable groups, especially women and children, in the prevention of human trafficking and recidivism. In 2014, provided 130 victims of child trafficking with nine-month scholarships to professional training centers.(42)
Awareness Raising Campaigns‡	MASSN-funded program that conducts nationwide campaigns to combat human trafficking by providing information and education. In 2014, MASSN hosted awareness sessions in 15 border provinces; held 120 discussion sessions; and provided 240 targeted police patrols in the most vulnerable areas.(42)
UN World Food Country Program (2011-2015)*	UN-funded program that promotes primary education and food security. Aims to reach 560,000 beneficiaries annually.(99)
National Council for the Prevention of Violence at Schools*	Oversees Government efforts to combat violence and abuse in schools.(2)
Child Friendly Schools*	UNICEF-funded pilot project in Ganzourgou and Namentenga provinces that constructs or converts existing schools into student-centered institutions. Provides quality education, school kits, water and sanitation facilities, and mobilizes communities in support of schools.(4, 43, 100-102) Provides teacher training on children's rights, child-friendly pedagogy, and development of extracurricular activities.(19, 101)
National Strategy on Civil Registration (2012-2016)*	Aims to achieve universal birth registration by creating information and registration centers.(2, 30) From March to June 2014, MTADS ran a campaign to provide birth certificates. Although aimed at potential voters, the campaign was open to every citizen.(42)
Resilience in the Sahel-Enhanced (2014-2019)†	USAID-funded, 5-year project to increase food security and improve livelihoods in Niger and Burkina Faso. UNICEF provided $130 million for the first two years of implementation and will provide an additional $85 million was provided to address food insecurity in Chad, Senegal, Mauritania, and Mali.(103, 104)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Burkina Faso.

Although Burkina Faso has social programs to address the worst forms of child labor in the production of cotton and in gold mining, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.(4)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Burkina Faso (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Strengthen enforcement of child labor laws by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Increasing the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce;</li> <li>■ Providing additional training on child labor issues; and</li> <li>■ Providing adequate resources and transportation for inspectors to conduct investigations.</li> </ul>	2009 – 2014
	Make statistics regarding the enforcement of child labor laws publicly available, including the number of inspections, prosecutions, violations, and citations/penalties issued and include disaggregated data on child labor infractions.	2009 – 2014
	Disaggregate and publish the number of complaints related to child labor that are made to MASSN hotline.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure all coordinating committees are able to meet regularly and improve data collection tools.	2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development and the Ministry of Youth, Vocational Training, and Employment's Action Plan.	2013 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Take measures to increase access to free and safe education for children by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Eliminating school-related fees;</li> <li>■ Increasing the number of teachers available;</li> <li>■ Increasing or improving school infrastructure, particularly in rural areas;</li> <li>■ Expanding access to birth registration;</li> <li>■ Ensuring children are safe from physical and sexual abuse in school;</li> <li>■ Ensuring students are not required to perform chores for teachers; and</li> <li>■ Providing all children with access to education, regardless of citizenship status.</li> </ul>	2010 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing social programs may have of on addressing child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Expand existing programs to address child labor in the production of cotton and gold mining and develop programs to address child labor in livestock herding, domestic work, street vending, and the worst forms of child labor in forced begging and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Burundi made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed an anti-trafficking in persons law. The government also successfully prosecuted offenders for trafficking girls into domestic service. However, children in Burundi are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Education in Burundi is not compulsory, increasing the risk of children's involvement in child labor. In addition, the Government did not conduct any child labor inspections during the reporting period.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORIAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Burundi are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-9) According to a national study published by the Government of Burundi and the ILO, the majority of children work in cash crops such as tea, coffee, cotton, sugarcane, and palm oil.(7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Burundi.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	27.2 (633,126)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	60.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	26.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		62.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2010-2011.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Sector/Industry
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-9, 13) Domestic service as a result of human trafficking (2, 4, 6, 7, 13)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In Burundi, older women sometimes offer free room and board to girls, but then force the children into commercial sexual exploitation so they can pay for their expenses.(2-4) These brothels are located in the poorer areas of Bujumbura, along the lake, and on trucking routes.(4) Poverty may also cause girls to enter commercial sexual exploitation to obtain money for their basic needs.(5) Male tourists from East Africa and the Middle East, teachers, police officers and gendarme, and military and prison officials sexually exploit Burundian girls.(4)

There are reports that Burundian children are trafficked within the country for domestic service and commercial sexual exploitation.(2-4, 6, 15) Business people recruit Burundian girls for commercial sexual exploitation in Bujumbura, as well as in Kenya, Rwanda, Uganda, and in the Middle East.(4)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Burundi has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 17 of Law No. 1/19 (22)

* No conscription (23)

The Penal Code makes the use of children under age 15 in armed conflict a crime, leaving children ages 15 to 17 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(19, 24)

The Penal Code contains certain prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children; however, the law does not prohibit the distribution, sale of, and possession of child pornography.(19)

In October 2014, Burundi enacted a new and robust anti-trafficking in persons law that fully prohibits child trafficking for sexual and labor exploitation.(20, 25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The General Directorate of Labor and Professional Development within the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS)	Administer and enforce all labor laws, including those on child labor.(26)
The National Police and the Brigade for the Protection of Women and Children	Conduct criminal investigations on the worst forms of child labor, including forced child labor, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities.(26) The National Police forwards investigation findings to the Ministry of Justice. The Brigade for the Protection of Women and Children, a division of the National Police, is charged with protecting children from commercial sexual exploitation.(26)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute cases of the worst forms of child labor.(13)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Burundi took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Social Security (MFPTSS) employed 18 labor inspectors to conduct all labor inspections.(1, 4) The number of labor inspectors is insufficient to adequately address child labor throughout Burundi.(25) Labor inspectors did not receive training related to child labor, and the MFPTSS did not conduct child labor inspections during the reporting period.(1, 4) The MFPTSS does not keep statistics on child labor inspections or violations.(25)

Inspectors can only conduct inspections in the formal sector, in which child labor is not prevalent.(1, 4) Inspections are further hindered by a lack of resources, such as office equipment and vehicles to travel to rural workplaces.(1, 25) Inspectors only initiate investigations in response to complaints; however, there is no existing mechanism for filing or responding to child labor complaints.(1)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, there were no investigators specifically charged with enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor; however, the National Police investigates potential cases when a report is received.(1) The National Police did not receive any child labor-related training during the reporting period.(27)

In 2014, there were no investigations or prosecutions initiated on the worst forms of child labor.(25) Research indicated that police officers repeatedly apprehended suspects involved in the commercial sexual exploitation of children but later released them without prosecution.(4)

In March 2014, the Government sentenced a convicted offender to 5 years of imprisonment for the abduction of two girls he held in domestic servitude and sexually abused. His accomplice was also convicted and sentenced to 2½ years of imprisonment.(4)

The Ministry of Justice has not taken action to inform judicial personnel of the new anti-trafficking in persons law or to instruct them on when and how to apply the law.(13) This lack of knowledge is a major obstacle to convicting and penalizing human traffickers.

There is no referral mechanism between law enforcement officials and social service providers. The National Police and the Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, and Gender partnered to ensure that trafficking victims received referrals to NGOs for services.(4) In some instances, the Brigade for the Protection of Women and Children provided counseling to children in situations of commercial sexual exploitation and mediated between these victims and their parents immediately thereafter, but it did not refer the children for additional services.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor, including through the implementation of community development programs that address the education and socioeconomic reintegration of children engaged in or removed from the worst forms of child labor.(26, 28, 29) Composed of nine member ministries and organizations, including the MFPTSS; the Ministry of National Solidarity, Human Rights, and Gender (MSNDPHG); the Ministry of Elementary and Secondary Education; the Ministry of Justice; the Ministry of Youth; and representatives from UNICEF, the ILO, youth associations, NGOs, and other civil society organizations.(1) Meets regularly and focuses on specific initiatives within the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(1)
Trafficking in Persons Permanent Commission	Oversee anti-trafficking in persons efforts.(4) Composed of officials from the Ministries of Justice, Public Security, Foreign Affairs, and the Interior; the MFPTSS; and the MSNDPHG.(25) During the reporting period, completed its national action plan and was instrumental in passing the anti-trafficking in persons law.(4, 25)
National Independent Commission for Human Rights (CNIDH)	Defend and promote human rights, including efforts against child trafficking and exploitation. Develop an annual report on the situation of human rights in Burundi, and report on more specific issues, including the rights of women and children.(30) Is an independent state institution composed of seven members who are elected by the National Assembly and appointed by Presidential decree for a 4-year term.(31)
Municipal Council for Youth and Children	Register vulnerable children, such as street children, orphans, and child heads of households, to target government assistance.(32) Includes representatives from the Ministries of Justice and Education, the MFPTSS, and the MSNDPHG.(32). Did not receive any funding and was inactive in 2014.(27)
Department of the Child and Family within the MSNDPHG	Coordinate, monitor, and oversee children's advocacy and family services programs conducted by public and private organizations. Develop policies and national laws on the promotion and protection of children and families.(27)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Burundi has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2010–2015)	Aims to eliminate all worst forms of child labor by 2015 and contribute to the elimination of all forms of child labor by 2025.(1, 29)
National Action Plan for Combatting Trafficking in Persons (2014–2017)†	Aims to significantly reduce human trafficking within Burundi by 2017 through the adoption of political, social, economic, and institutional measures.(33) Identifies women and children as being the most vulnerable to human trafficking in Burundi. Lists a number of sectors in which trafficking is believed to exist and attempts to describe the profile of a human trafficker.(13)
National Strategy for Street Children	Plans to prevent children from entering the street, reduce the number of street children, and reintegrate 60 percent of street children into their communities and families by 2016. Interventions include media awareness campaigns on child begging, violence, and sexual and labor exploitation.(34)
PRSP*	Details a 5-year strategy to reduce poverty, increase economic growth and development, and strengthen government institutions, including schools.(12, 15, 26)
UNDAF (2012–2016)	Plans to develop a database for information on the worst forms of child labor, and legislation and regulations for the education and training of children and adolescents.(35)
Decent Work Country Program Plan (2012–2015)	Aims to reinforce the capacity of the National Multi-Sector Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor through advocacy and mobilization of the necessary resources.(36)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In January 2014, a revised National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor covering the period 2014–2016 was developed; the Plan has not yet been officially approved.(27, 37, 38)

There is no compulsory age for education. The lack of standards in this area may increase the risk of children's involvement in child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Burundi funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child Domestic Labor Study‡	UNICEF supported the MFPTSS to conduct a qualitative study on child domestic labor.(1) Final report published in March 2014 revealed that both boys and girls engage in child domestic labor in Burundi. Most workers come from the Gitega, Kayanza, and Ngozi provinces.(39)
Child Trafficking Study‡	CNIDH-implemented study with support from the Government of France to better understand how to eliminate child trafficking and exploitation in Burundi.(9, 40) Final report published in May 2014 describes the current situation of child trafficking and exploitation, challenges to prevention, and proposed ways to address the challenges.(41)
Centers for Family and Community Development‡	MSNDPHG centers that address human rights and gender-based violence issues, including the reintegration of victims into their home communities.(4) The Government operated two centers in Buyenzi and Kigobe communes to assist street children, including an unknown number of victims of forced child labor. These children were identified and provided with counseling through the centers.(4) Centers operate at the local level; however, they are not present in all provinces and communes in Burundi.(42, 43)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Burundi.

Although the Government of Burundi has implemented programs to reach children engaged in some forms of child labor, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children in agriculture, industry, or commercial sexual exploitation. Additionally, the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Burundi (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that laws prohibit the use of children under age 18 in armed conflict.	2012 – 2014
	Ensure that the law protects children under age 18 from all forms of commercial sexual exploitation, including the distribution, sale, and possession of child pornography.	2014
Enforcement	Increase the law enforcement capacity, specifically by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Increasing the number of labor inspectors.</li> <li>■ Providing adequate training and resources for conducting labor inspections.</li> <li>■ Establishing a mechanism for filing child labor complaints.</li> <li>■ Increasing the number of trained investigators charged with enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor to ensure that criminal investigations and prosecutions take place.</li> <li>■ Training judicial personnel on the new anti-trafficking in persons law to ensure that offenders are convicted.</li> <li>■ Establishing a referral mechanism between law enforcement officials and social service providers.</li> </ul>	2009 – 2014
	Collect and publish data on child labor law enforcement.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure that the Municipal Council for Youth and Children receives funding so it may conduct activities targeting children who are vulnerable to child labor.	2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the PRSP.	2012 – 2014
	Adopt a national policy that establishes a compulsory education age equal to or higher than the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2014
Social Programs	Expand the Centers for Family and Community Development to cover all regions of the country.	2011 – 2014
	Institute and expand existing programs to address child labor in agriculture and industry, and the worst forms of child labor in commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2014

Cabo Verde

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Cabo Verde made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government established the Children and Adolescent Committee to Prevent and Combat Sexual Abuse and Exploitation; adopted a National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor; trained labor and criminal law enforcement officials on issues related to child labor, including its worst forms; and continued to fund projects to combat child labor. However, children in Cabo Verde are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic service. Gaps in legislation continue to put children at risk, including the lack of prohibitions on all forms of commercial sexual exploitation for children, human trafficking for labor exploitation, and the use of children in all illicit activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cabo Verde are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic service.(1-7) A child labor study conducted in 2012 found that the majority of working children are male and work in rural areas. Santiago and Fogo Islands had the highest prevalence of child labor, and Brava Island had the lowest prevalence.(8) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cabo Verde.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	3.2 (2,392)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	90.1
Combining Work and School (%)	10-14 yrs.	1.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		99.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(9)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Inquérito as Despesas e Receitas Familiares Survey, 2001–2002.(10)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown (1-3, 5-7)
	Raising livestock (1-3, 7)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (1-3, 6)
	Forestry,* activities unknown (1)
Industry	Treating water* (6)
	Construction,* including extracting sand (11)
Services	Domestic service (1-6, 11)
	Street work, including vending, garbage scavenging, car washing, and begging (2-5, 12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (3, 5)
	Used in illicit activities, including drug trafficking* (3, 5, 12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The commercial sexual exploitation of both boys and girls, including exploitation in the tourism industry, occurs in Cabo Verde. (3, 5) There is evidence that children are victims of sexual exploitation in Santa Maria, Praia, and Mindelo. Children are trafficked within Cabo Verde and to Guinea. (5, 13) Children begging and vending goods on the street are more susceptible to human trafficking. (14) Children from Cabo Verde are also forced to transport drugs to Brazil and Portugal. (5)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cabo Verde has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 261 of the Labor Code (15)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 264 of the Labor Code; Article 133 of the Civil Code (15, 16)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 264 and 267 of the Labor Code (15)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 14 of the Labor Code (15)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 149 of the Penal Code (17)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 148–150 of the Penal Code (17)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 8 of Act No. 78/IV/93 (18)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 2 of Legislative Decree No. 6/93 (19, 20)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	17	Article 31 of Legislative Decree No. 6/93 (19, 21)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 13 and 20 of the Legislative Decree of the Education System (1, 22)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 14 of the Legislative Decree of the Education System (22)

The Labor Code prohibits minors from engaging in night work and states that minors cannot conduct activities that are not in accordance with their physical and mental development. These prohibitions, however, are not specific enough to facilitate enforcement. (15) In 2014, the Government finalized a list of specific hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children under age 18; the list is currently awaiting approval by the Ministry Council. (11)

The Penal Code only protects children age 16 and younger from human trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation. (17) A revised Penal Code, which prohibits human trafficking of all persons for both commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, is awaiting approval. (23, 24)

Cabo Verde

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Penal Code does not prohibit using minors ages 16 and 17 for commercial sexual exploitation, nor that of children age 14 and older in sex shows and pornography.(17) Furthermore, Cabo Verdean law does not contain prohibitions on selling and benefitting from the commercial sexual exploitation of children, nor does it prohibit distributing, selling, possessing, and benefitting from child pornography.

While Act No. 78/IV/93 prohibits children from being used for drug trafficking, Cabo Verdean law does not prohibit the use of children in other illicit activities.(18)

According to Article 8 of Legislative Decree No. 6/93, the minimum age for military recruitment may be amended in times of war.(20, 21) The Government has stated that children younger than age 17 would not be conscripted into the military during times of conflict; however, this leaves children age 17 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(19, 21)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Inspector General for Labor (IGT)	Monitor and enforce child labor laws, working closely with the Ministry of Justice and the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA).(2, 25, 26)
Ministry of Justice, including the Judicial Police and the National Police	The Judicial Police conduct criminal investigations and the National Police make arrests related to the worst forms of child labor, including human trafficking.(5, 14, 27)

Law enforcement agencies in Cabo Verde took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, 14 labor inspectors conducted labor inspections in Cabo Verde. During the reporting period, some Inspector General for Labor (IGT) inspectors participated in National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication (CNPETI) training and workshop sessions on child labor, including its worst forms.(2, 27) The IGT requires additional funding so labor inspectors are able to conduct inspections on all of the islands in the archipelago.(2, 20)

Inspectors conducted 1,482 inspections in all formal sectors of the economy, including in places where children might work.(2, 20) The IGT conducts both announced and unannounced site visit inspections and is able to carry out child labor inspections of formal-sector companies even if they have not received complaints against a specific company.(2, 20) Disque Denuncia, the Government's hotline for reporting cases of child exploitation, attended to 18 cases of child labor in 2014.(5, 11) Two of these cases were referred to the IGT; the remaining cases were referred to the Cabo Verdean Institute for Children and Adolescents (ICCA) for placement in social programs.(11)

Inspectors found violations of hazardous child labor, but no information is available on how many violations were found. It is unclear how hazardous child labor was identified in these cases because the law does not contain specific prohibitions on hazardous occupations or activities for children.(2) No penalties or citations for child labor violations were issued during the reporting period.(2) The IGT refers victims of child labor to ICCA for social protection services.(11)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Judicial Police employed 135 officers and the National Police employed 1,764 officers.(20) In July 2014, the Government, in partnership with USDOS and the UN, held a training for both the Judicial Police and the National Police on how to identify, investigate, and respond to cases of human trafficking.(14) No investigations or prosecutions involving the worst forms of child labor were carried out during the reporting period.(2)

A mechanism exists between the Ministry of Justice and ICCA to refer child trafficking victims; however, research did not find referral mechanisms for victims of other worst forms of child labor.(14)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for Child Labor Prevention and Eradication in Cabo Verde (CNPETI)	Coordinate the execution of the National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor (PANPETI), ensuring that national laws comply with international conventions on child labor, and produce yearly reports on child labor issues for the National Assembly. Composed of representatives from 30 institutions, including government agencies, civil society groups, unions, the ILO, and UNICEF.(28, 29) CNPETI, supervised by ICCA, meets four times a year with other collaborating institutions to discuss implementation, monitoring, and evaluation of CNPCTI's objectives.(2, 29)
Children and Adolescent Committee to Prevent and Combat Sexual Abuse and Exploitation*	Contribute to the prevention and elimination of child sexual exploitation by coordinating the activities of organizations and public and private services. The committee members meet once a year.(27) Composed of representatives from the Ministry of Justice, the Institute for Gender and Equality, the Association of Cabo Verdean Journalists, the Solidarity Foundation, the National Commission for Human Rights and Citizenship, and NGOs.(14)
National Unit for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor	Coordinate and monitor the implementation of all national programs and activities to prevent and eradicate child labor. Participate in CNPETI meetings to coordinate collective efforts to address child labor. Provide direct services to those affected by child labor.(30, 31)
Municipal Committee for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents (CMDDCA)	Assist and monitor vulnerable children and their families.(4) Seventeen CMDDCAs operate under municipal jurisdiction; they include representatives from the Ministry of Education and Sports, municipalities, health departments, the National Police, courts, and other offices.(4)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cabo Verde has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor†	Prioritizes the eradication of child labor. Outlines specific objectives, including data collection; institutional capacity building; and enhancement of measures to prevent, protect, and remove children from involvement in child labor.(4, 28) Aims to engage multiple stakeholders, such as government agencies, workers' organizations, and child workers and their families, in the efforts to achieve these goals.(4, 28)
Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015.(32, 33)
The Code of Ethics Against the Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents†	Guides and governs all agencies involved in the tourism sector in Cabo Verde.(34) Approved in July 2014 during a workshop organized by the Ministry of Youth, Employment, and Development of Human Resources and the Chamber of Commerce of Leeward Islands, in partnership with the ILO.(14) Will allow the tourism sector to play a prominent role in the fight against the exploitation of children and adolescents, with particular regard to sexual exploitation.(14, 34)
Strategic Plan for the Implementation of the National Policy for Children and Adolescents*	Aims to increase coordination among agencies serving children and youth, including the abandoned and vulnerable. Includes plans to establish a standing committee to oversee its implementation and foster collaboration among public bodies.(35, 36)
Poverty Reduction and Growth Plan III (2012–2016)	Identifies strategies to reduce poverty, foster economic development, and bolster education in order to reduce child labor.(30, 37) Includes plans to develop educational materials on child labor and the sexual exploitation of children.(28)
National Action Plan for Human and Citizenship Rights	Targets human rights violations, including those affecting children and adolescents. For example, proposes the development of mechanisms to identify cases of forced labor involving children under age 14, as well as programs and necessary measures to end these situations.(38) Also plans to increase and develop programs that combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(28)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Cabo Verde funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Cabo Verde

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation Through ECOWAS I and II	USDOL-funded regional projects that supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West African subregion by providing policy and capacity building support for all ECOWAS states.(39, 40)
Emergency and Social Integration Centers for Children‡	ICCA-run program that operates emergency centers for child victims of abuse and sexual exploitation on Santiago and Mindelo Islands.(5, 25, 27, 37) Centers provide social, psychological, and medical services to children who have experienced long-term trauma. Centers also guide children toward schools and vocational training centers.(5, 25, 27) The Government maintained five centers on Boa Vista, Fogo, Sal, Santiago, and São Nicolau Islands.(5)
Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor in West Africa	$5.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 5-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC in collaboration with the Government. Aimed to strengthen the institutional and legal environment, improve the knowledge base, and build local capacity related to child labor.(28, 41)
Government Efforts to Increase Access to Education*‡	Government program funded by WFP and UNICEF, led by the Cabo Verde Social and Educational Action Institute, that ensures school access for vulnerable children by providing funds for school fees, school materials, and free meals.(25, 37) Secondary education is free for children whose families earn less than $1,820 annually.(3)
Street Children Program ( Nós Kaza-Criança fora da rua, dentro da escola )‡	Government program run by ICCA for street children vulnerable to sexual and labor exploitation. Centers provide counseling and aim to reintegrate street children into their families and schools.(25, 37) Six day centers operate on the Boa Vista, Fogo, Santo Antão, São Nicolau, São Vicente, and Santiago Islands.(5)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Cabo Verde.

Although Cabo Verde has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem fully. Additionally, research found no evidence that the Government has carried out programs to assist children in agriculture and domestic service.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cabo Verde (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Approve the list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children.	2014
	Ensure that all children under age 18 are protected from human trafficking for forced labor.	2014
	Ensure that the law protects all children under age 18 from all forms of commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2014
	Prohibit the use of children in all illicit activities.	2014
	Ensure children under age 18 are prohibited from military conscription in all circumstances.	2011 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure that the IGT receives adequate funding to conduct labor inspections on all islands.	2014
	Make data on child labor violations publicly available and ensure that violators are penalized.	2014
	Ensure that investigations of crimes related to the worst forms of child labor are being conducted and make data on investigations and prosecutions publicly available.	2011 – 2014
	Establish a referral mechanism between criminal law enforcement and social welfare services for children found in all of the worst forms of child labor.	2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Strategic Plan for the Implementation of the National Policy for Children and Adolescents.	2011 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine specific activities related to children's work in agriculture to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing education programs may have on child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem and institute programs to address child labor in agriculture and domestic service.	2010 – 2014

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Cambodia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT) created 24 interdepartmental inspection teams, which include a child labor inspector, and significantly increased the number of inspections and the number of inspectors trained to conduct child labor investigations. Additionally, the Government made several efforts to combat trafficking in persons (TIP), including drafting guidelines for the identification and referral of victims of TIP and sexual exploitation, and implementing them in six target areas. However, children in Cambodia continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor as victims of human trafficking. The legal framework leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as there is no compulsory education requirement, and the law allows children as young as age 12 to engage in domestic work. Labor inspectors lack sufficient resources to adequately monitor child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cambodia are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-8) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including as victims of human trafficking.(5, 9-12) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Cambodia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	9.4 (276,583)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	85.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	9.1
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(13)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Labour Force and Child Labour Survey, 2012.(14)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Fishing, including deep-sea† and night fishing† (1-4)
	Peeling shrimp and shucking crabs* (1, 4)
	Production of tobacco, cassava, rubber, rice,* and sugarcane* (4-8)
	Logging for the production of timber† (2)
Industry	Making bricks† (2, 4, 5, 9)
	Production of salt (5, 9, 15)
	Construction,† including operating transportation equipment (2, 9)
	Production of textiles, including bleaching, dyeing and finishing with chemicals;† and garments* (2, 16)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Industry	Production of alcoholic beverages† (2)
	Work in slaughterhouses for the production of meat† (2)
	Manufacturing of wood*† and metal*† products (2, 5)
Services	Domestic service (17-20)
	Work as security guard† and in entertainment,† including as bartenders, masseurs, dancers, and waiters (2, 12)
	Work on the streets, including begging, vending, shoe polishing, scavenging, and portering (5, 9, 16, 20)
	Work as garbage pickers (21)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (5, 9, 11, 12, 22, 23)
	Domestic service, begging, street vending, and factory work each as a result of human trafficking (5, 9-12)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a)-(c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked to, from, and within Cambodia for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation.(12) Trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation occurs primarily from Cambodia to Thailand, from Vietnam to Cambodia, and within Cambodia.(9, 11, 12, 22) Children are trafficked from smaller villages to larger cities and primarily to Malaysia, Thailand, and Vietnam to work as domestic servants.(10-12, 17) Children are trafficked primarily to Thailand to work as street vendors, sell candy or flowers, or work in factories.(11) Children are also trafficked to Thailand and Vietnam, where they are forced to beg and work as street vendors.(9, 12)

Significant barriers to accessing education still exist. In remote areas, children have to travel long distances to reach school, and transportation is limited.(5, 20) This sometimes deters parents from sending girls to school due to safety concerns.(20) While there is a current moratorium on new economic land concessions, some relocation sites do not meet human rights standards, including access to education services.(24) The Education Law provides for free education in practice; however, teacher salaries are low and instructors often charge extra fees to students for exams, snacks, tutoring, and even class time.(5, 25, 26) The lack of bilingual education can be an obstacle to school access for the children of ethnic minorities and needs to be further expanded.(19)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cambodia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 177 of the Labor Law (27)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 173 and 177 of the Labor Law; Regulation on the Prohibition of Hazardous Child Labor (27, 28)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Regulation on the Prohibition of Hazardous Child Labor (28)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 15 of the Labor Law (27)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Law on Suppression of the Kidnapping, Trafficking, and Exploitation of Human Persons (29)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Law on Suppression of the Kidnapping, Trafficking, and Exploitation of Human Persons (29)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 343–346 of the Penal Code (30)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	The Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (31, 32)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	The Law on General Statutes for the Military Personnel of the Royal Cambodian Armed Forces (31, 32)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 31 of the Education Law of 2007 (33)

The Cambodian Labor Law does not apply to domestic or household workers, as provided in Article 1 of the Labor Law.(27)

Education is free, but not compulsory, through grade nine.(33) The lack of compulsory schooling makes children under age 15, the legal age to work, particularly vulnerable to child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.

In May 2014, the Ministry of Tourism issued the Subdecree on the Management of Tourism Entertainment-Tourism Centers for Adults (METCA) to fight against child sexual exploitation in tourism.(23) The Subdecree requires METCA operators—dancing halls, discotheques, karaoke clubs, and beer gardens—not to engage in human trafficking or sexual exploitation and allows for fines, suspension, or cancellation of a license if violations occur.(34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Department of Child Labor within the Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT)	Enforce child-related provisions of the labor law and manage Cambodia’s Child Labor Monitoring System. (16, 35)
The Cambodian National Police’s Anti-Human Trafficking and Juvenile Protection Department (Anti-Trafficking Police)	Enforce laws against trafficking, child sexual exploitation, and criminal activities, along with municipal and provincial anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection offices.(36) Commanded by the Ministry of the Interior (MOI).(37) Complaints about human trafficking can be filed through the anti-trafficking hotline, 1288.(23)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY)	Accompany the police on investigations, during which child victims may be found, and subsequently refer child victims to NGO services.(4)

Law enforcement agencies in Cambodia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Department of Child Labor increased the number of inspectors trained to conduct child labor inspections to 58 from 35 the previous year. The Ministry of Labor and Vocational Training (MOLVT) also created 24 interdepartmental inspection teams, which include a child labor inspector.(38) While the MOLVT has approximately 342 inspectors nationwide, only inspectors trained in child labor inspection look for child labor violations.(39) Inspectors from the Department of Child Labor were trained on relevant laws and inspection techniques to identify child labor; however, the MOLVT lacks standardized guidelines for conducting labor inspections.(38)

The Department of Child Labor reports that, due to budget constraints, it is able to conduct inspections only in and around the capital city of Phnom Penh.(38)

The MOLVT conducted 723 inspections; 613 were of garment and textile factories, and 110 were of other enterprises. Of the 723 inspections conducted, 633 were site visits.(38) Inspectors found a total of 46 cases of violations of child labor in garment and textile factories, which primarily comprised underage workers.(38, 39) The 46 cases included 34 cases found by a joint inspection team of the MOLVT inspectors and the Better Factories Cambodia (BFC) program.(38) The 46 children were removed from the factories, were referred to social services, and received vocational training.(38) While the MOLVT has specific regulations regarding acceptable work for children in agriculture, fishing, and tobacco and cassava production, government officials report that they have not yet begun to enforce these regulations.(16) The Government lacks standardized guidelines on how to conduct labor inspections.(40) Additionally, most inspections are complaint driven and do not target or monitor where hazardous child labor is known to occur.(20)

Inspectors issued warnings to 10 garment and textile factories.(38) Although labor inspectors have the authority to order the immediate removal of children from the workplace and to levy fines, procedures for applying such penalties are not administered uniformly.(40)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Anti-Trafficking Police employed 500 police officers, approximately 20 in each province, to enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor.(38) The National Committee on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor and Sexual Exploitation, in collaboration with NGOs, provided anti-human trafficking training to 2,626 law enforcement officers and government officials in all the provinces in Cambodia. The Ministry of Interior (MOI), however, has not incorporated anti-trafficking training into the curriculum of the Cambodian National Police academies.(41)

The Government reported that police arrested 49 Cambodians and 9 foreigners for offenses related to human trafficking and child prostitution in 2014. Research found that these data are likely underreported, and that the Government needs increased capacity to collect and report reliable and timely data.(41) In 2014, the Anti-Trafficking Police rescued 101 underage victims and referred them to the Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans, and Youth Rehabilitation (MOSAVY).(38) The MOSAVY also identified and assisted 336 victims, including 218 minors, among persons repatriated from Thailand.(41) The MOSAVY drafted guidelines to identify and refer victims of human trafficking and sexual exploitation. These draft guidelines have been implemented in Phnom Penh and in five additional provinces.(23)

During the reporting period, the Anti-Trafficking Police reported that authorities prosecuted 21 individuals for trafficking in persons offenses. Cambodia courts convicted 29 individuals for 22 sex trafficking convictions and seven labor trafficking convictions.(41) As with investigations, research found that these data are likely underreported, and that the Government needs increased capacity to collect and report on reliable and timely data.(41) Judges can determine whether perpetrators will be imprisoned or fined, as well as the amount of the fine. Further, partly due to the high levels of corruption within the judicial system, the penalties imposed are not uniformly administered and do not adhere to the parameters prescribed by law.(4, 31, 39)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Cambodia

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The National Sub-Committee on Child Labor of the Cambodian National Council for Children (CNCC)	Coordinate child labor issues at the national level. Ensure that projects and programs follow national policy on child labor.(42) It includes all concerned ministries, businesses, trade unions, and NGOs. Provincial committees on the Protection of Child Rights and Provincial Committees on Child labor coordinate efforts to address child labor at the provincial level.(42)
The National Committee on Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor and Sexual Exploitation of Women and Children (NC/STSLS)	Coordinate policymaking efforts with regards to trafficking. Includes representatives from the Government of Cambodia and civil society.(35, 43)
Migration Working Group within NC/STSLS	Coordinate multisectoral participation to address migration issues, gather and monitor data on migration, facilitate information exchange, and provide recommendations on the formulation of agreements with relevant countries. Chaired by the Ministry of Interior and includes representatives from the Government, the UN, and NGOs.(43)

The National Committee on Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, and Labor and Sexual Exploitation of Women and Children (NC/STSLS) finalized the draft of the Second National Plan of Action (NPA II) 2014 – 2018 and was launched on February 10, 2015.(41)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cambodia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Tackle Child Labor in Inland and Coastal Fisheries	Incorporates child labor into the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries (MOAF)'s policies and legal frameworks for fisheries and aquaculture. Assesses work hazards for children in fisheries and aquaculture and ensures that children who work in fisheries and their families have access to education and livelihood opportunities.(35) In March 2014, MOAF with technical assistance from the ILO and World Vision, finalized draft guidelines for child workers in the fisheries sector.(44) Guidelines define the kinds of hazardous activities in which children are not permitted to engage and set fines for employers who violate them. Awaiting official approval from MOAF and the MOL.(44)
Policy and National Minimum Standards for the Protection of the Rights of Victims of Human Trafficking	Guidelines to improve the treatment of trafficking in persons victims. Mandates MOSAVY to train relevant government officials.(45) Lists children among those identified as victims of trafficking in Cambodia and includes the MOI's Safety Village Commune/Sangkat Policy Guide, which mandates that local governments take action to end the trafficking of women and children to ensure safe communes.(35, 46)
The Education Strategic Plan (2014 – 2018)†	Outlines a plan to ensure equitable access for all education services, enhance the quality and relevance of learning, and ensure effective leadership and management of education staff at all levels. Includes programs and activities aimed at improving the response to human trafficking and child labor.(47) New Plan launched in March 2014.(47)
The National Youth Policy	Aims to afford meaningful opportunities to young people ages 15 to 30 and provide them with the skills they need to enhance their economic participation.(48)
Rectangular Strategy for Growth, Employment, Equity and Efficiency Phase III (2013 – 2017)	Defines Cambodia's socioeconomic policy agenda and outlines a strategy for sustainable development and poverty reduction. Includes social protection programs to ensure poor children have access to education; promotes sustainable development of the health sector, including improved sanitation, health, and nutrition of children; and focuses on strengthening law enforcement to be more effective against human trafficking and sexual exploitation of children.(49)
National Social Protection Strategy (2011 – 2015)	Aims to protect the poorest and most disadvantaged populations, mitigate risk by providing coping strategies, and promote poverty reduction by building human capital and expanding opportunities such as access to health, nutrition, and education services, which the strategy states will benefit child laborers and their families.(50)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Political impasse, including a 10-month boycott of parliament by the opposition, significantly impacted the Government's ability to function and pass several updated policies.(38) The National Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NPA-WFCL) ended in 2012. The Department of Child Labor, with technical assistance from the ILO, is incorporating information from the 2013 Child Labor Survey into the development of a new plan.(51) The National Plan of Action on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, Labor, and Sexual Exploitation (NPA-STSLs) and MOSAVY's First Occupational Safety and Health Master Plan ended in 2013. The NC/STSLs announced that the Second NPA-STSLs, covering years 2014 – 2018, has been drafted and was launched in February 2015.(41) The second Occupational Safety and Health Master Plan has been drafted and is expected to be launched in 2015.(39)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Cambodia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Commune Committees for Women and Children (CCWC)‡	MOLVT and provincial government program that establishes and trains these committees at the commune and village levels to raise awareness of child labor regulations, ensuring that children continue to go to school, and reporting employers who use child labor.(16)
Street People Committee‡	Interministerial committee chaired by MOSAVY that provides direct support for street children. Responsible for determining the number of people living and working on the street, including children, and providing for their needs.(37, 52)
Bilingual Education Programs*‡	Ministry of Education, Youth, and Sport's (MOEYS) bilingual education program for ethnic minority children in preschools and primary schools in three provinces. Targets 2,359 students from grades one through three in 27 schools.(52, 53)
Cambodians EXCEL: Eliminating eXploitative Child Labor through Education and Livelihoods (2012 – 2016)	$10 million, USDOL funded, 4-year project to combat child labor in agriculture, fishing, and domestic service. Targets 28,000 child laborers and at-risk children to receive education services, and 14,000 households to receive livelihood services.(54) Addresses a complex set of factors causing child labor, including poverty, limited education access, cultural acceptance of child labor, debt, migration, and lack of regulation in the informal sector.(54)
Better Factories Cambodia (BFC)	Monitors garment factories through unannounced visits to check for compliance with national and international labor standards, and works with factories implementing remediation plans. Works with tripartite partners, including the Government of Cambodia, trade unions, and Garment Manufacturers Association in Cambodia (GMAC), and is part of a global partnership between the ILO and the International Finance Corporation (IFC).(55) In December 2014, the GMAC and BFC signed an agreement to remove child labor from the garment sector.(56)
Counter Trafficking in Persons II (CTIP II) (2011 – 2015)	$5.4 million USAID-funded, 4-year program implemented by Winrock International to improve the Government and civil society's coordination and capacity to effectively combat all forms of human trafficking. CTIP II focuses specifically on addressing the needs of victims of forced labor and sexual exploitation.(57)
Improved Basic Education in Cambodia Project (2009 – 2014)*	$10 million USAID-funded, 5-year project supported by the MOEYS to enhance access to education, targeting 202 primary schools and 101 lower secondary schools. Provides improvement grants to schools for scholarships, latrines, and equipment including computer and science labs.(58)
UN WFP Country Program (2011 – 2016)*	Australian-funded, 5-year program implemented by the MOEYS to improve food security and nutrition, which includes providing breakfast and take-home rations to vulnerable primary school children, and off-season income-generation activities for the poor.(59) In 2013, WFP introduced a new cash scholarship transfer pilot program through a mobile banking system, in partnership with Angkor Microfinance of Kampuchea. Beneficiaries of the program must attend 80 percent of their classes and receive cash assistance that can be used for food or school supplies.(60)
Project Childhood (2010 – 2014)	$3.7 million Australian-funded, 4-year regional project to combat child sex tourism in Cambodia, Laos, Thailand, and Vietnam.(61, 62) Seeks to ensure that the relevant legislative framework of each participating country meets international standards; that the police, prosecutors, and judges understand the law; and that mechanisms are established to promote cooperation within and across borders.(62)
ILO Decent Work Country Program (2011 – 2015), endorsed by the MOSAVY	Highlights child labor issues and outlines a framework for enhancing policies, laws, and enforcement mechanisms to protect children.(26)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Cambodia.

The Government of Cambodia relies heavily on outside funding to combat child labor, including its worst forms.(16)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cambodia (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Institute and enforce a compulsory education age that is at a minimum equal to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions apply to children working as domestic workers.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure regular inspections inspect for child labor violations.	2014
	Develop and implement standardized guidelines for conducting child labor inspections.	2011 – 2014
	Provide sufficient resources for the enforcement of child labor laws to ensure inspections are conducted throughout the country.	2010 – 2014
	Enforce regulations regarding child labor in agriculture, tobacco, cassava, and fishing.	2012 – 2014
	Conduct targeted inspections of industries in which hazardous child labor is known to occur.	2009 – 2014
	Increase anti-trafficking training for law enforcement officers including at Cambodian National Police academies.	2014
	Increase capacity to collect and report on reliable and timely TIP data.	2014
Government Policies	Uniformly administer penalties for violations of child labor laws in accordance with the parameters prescribed by law.	2009 – 2014
	Approve a new National Plan of Action on the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NPA-WFCL).	2013 – 2014
	Approve a new National Plan of Action on the Suppression of Human Trafficking, Smuggling, Labor, and Sexual Exploitation (NPA-STSL).	2014
Social Programs	Approve a new Occupational Safety and Health Master Plan.	2014
	Ensure all children have access to free quality education, including by ensuring school fees are not charged and addressing distance, transport, and language barriers.	2013 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing poverty alleviation, food security, and education programs may have on the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2014

Cameroon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Cameroon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government created a National Steering Committee to combat child labor and adopted a National Action Plan against Child Labor and Trafficking in Persons. The Government also adopted a Decent Work Country Program that includes child labor issues and continued to support programs that increase access to education and health care. However, children in Cameroon are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. The Government has not ratified UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, nor has it prohibited the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Cameroon are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. (1-11) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Cameroon.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	56.2
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	79.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	52.7
Primary Completion Rate (%)		72.9

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cocoa, bananas,* coffee,* palm oil,* rubber,* and tea,* including handling pesticides, machetes, clearing fields, and lifting heavy loads (1, 5-11) Raising livestock* (5, 9, 14)
Industry	Work in artisanal gold mines and gravel quarries,* transporting heavy loads of sand or gravel,* breaking stones,* and digging or standing in stagnant water to extract minerals* (1, 7, 15-17) Construction,* including carrying heavy loads of water,* concrete,* cement* and bricks* (1, 7)
Services	Domestic work (1, 7-9, 11, 18) Street work, including carrying heavy luggage,* vending,* and begging*(1, 7, 19)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation* sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2-4, 7, 20, 21) Forced labor in agriculture in the production of cocoa, tea, cotton, and onions, fishing, livestock raising, domestic work, artisanal gold mines and gravel quarries, street vending, and construction each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 3, 7, 21, 22) Forced begging* (6, 9, 23)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182

A 2010 pilot study by the ILO estimates that approximately 4,000 children between ages 11 and 17, mostly girls, were subjected to commercial sexual exploitation.(4, 21) In the urban informal sector, children carry heavy luggage and sell goods on the streets, such as cigarettes and water.(19, 21) In the three northern regions, it is a tradition to send boys, called talibés, to Koranic teachers to receive education. While some boys receive lessons, others are forced by their teachers to beg or perform other work and to surrender the money that they earn.(6, 9, 23) Cameroon is a source, transit, and destination country for child trafficking from neighboring countries in Central and West Africa and the Middle East.(2, 7, 21, 22) Improved public awareness about child trafficking has reduced the number of parents who willingly give their children to intermediaries promising education or a better life in an urban city. As a result, reports of children being kidnapped for human trafficking have increased, including in Yaoundé.(21) Victims of child trafficking are forced into domestic work, begging, vending, work in agriculture, fishing, mining, quarrying, or are subject to commercial sexual exploitation. (2, 7, 21, 22) Child trafficking also occurs internally for the purposes of hereditary slavery in the Northwest Region and the three northern regions, or for commercial sexual exploitation in southern Cameroon.(3, 7, 21, 24)

Although education is free in Cameroon, in practice, families must pay for uniforms, books, and other school-related fees.(1, 9, 25-28) The Ministry of Education offers fee waivers to disadvantaged primary students, but these waivers sometimes do not cover the costs or arrive late, which means that parents must still pay some out-of-pocket fees.(1, 29) In 2014, the Government claimed to have banned the collection of Parent-Teacher Association fees, although they were still collected in many areas; research did not find a publicly available copy of this decree.(30, 31) Girls were also subject to sexual harassment at schools and often dropped out due to early pregnancy or domestic responsibilities. A lack of schools in rural areas and birth registration requirements further hindered access to education, since many children are not born in formal health facilities, which issue the birth declarations necessary to obtain birth certificates.(9, 19, 27) This is particularly true in the Extreme North Region, where UNICEF estimates that approximately 65 percent of children do not have birth certificates.(21)

Additionally, ongoing insecurity along Cameroon’s borders with Nigeria and the Central African Republic has displaced many Cameroonians and strained the Government’s resources for addressing child labor.(31)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Cameroon has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Section 86 of the Labor Code (32)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 9-23 of Order N° 017 on Child Labor; Section 86 of the Labor Code (32, 33)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations and/or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 9-23 of Order N° 017 on Child Labor (33)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Sections 1-6 of Law N° 2011/024 Relating to the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Slavery; Articles 292, 293 and 342 of the Penal Code; Section 2 of the Labor Code (32, 34, 35)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Sections 1-6 of Law N° 2011/024; Articles 11, 352 and 353 of the Penal Code (34, 35)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 265, 343-347 of the Penal Code; Article 76 of Law N° 2010/12 on Cybersecurity and Cybercriminality (34, 36)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 2 of Decree N° 2001/187 Fixing the Conditions and Recruitment and Admission to Military Schools (37)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	11	Preamble of the Constitution; Articles 9 and 16 of Law N° 1998/004 Orienting the Education System (9, 38, 39)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 48 (2) of Presidential Decree N° 2001/041 (40)

* No conscription (37, 41)

While Order N° 017 on Child Labor sets a minimum age for hazardous work and prohibits certain occupations for children, the laws are not extended to children working in noncontractual employment.(33, 42) Additionally, Articles 20 and 21 of Order N° 017 on Child Labor prohibit hazardous activities for children under age 18, with two exceptions for those under age 16. This means children ages 16 to 17 can legally be employed in hazardous tasks such as operating horizontal winches or pulleys, servicing steam valves, and working on scaffolding.(33) Additionally, Law N° 1998/004 Orienting the Education System makes education compulsory through primary school, but it does not specifically establish a compulsory education age.(28, 43) Most children complete primary school around age 11, which makes children ages 12 to 14 particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school and are below the minimum age for work.(28, 32)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINLSS)	Lead efforts to enforce child labor laws, in cooperation with other government bodies, including the Ministries of Social Affairs; Justice; Women's Empowerment and Family; Territorial Administration and Decentralization; and Tourism.(1, 30) Primarily concerned with the welfare of vulnerable groups, including women, children, and indigenous groups. Advocate on behalf of victims, bring complaints to court, and provide social services to victims of child labor.(31)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Contribute to investigations through police and gendarmes and through prosecution of offenders as appropriate.(31, 44)
Ministry of National Security and Defense's National Gendarmerie (SED)	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking and investigate violations of child labor laws throughout the country in both rural and urban areas.(30, 31)
General Delegate for National Security's Special Vice Squad (DGSN)	Enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor and investigate violations in urban areas.(30, 31)
Ministry of Territorial Administration and Decentralization	Enforce child labor laws at the regional level. Local representatives may settle child labor disputes amicably or refer the case to the SED, DGSN or MOJ for further investigation and prosecution.(31)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Social Affairs (MINAS)	Lead government efforts to combat human trafficking.(21) Provide social services and protection to victims of child trafficking, including education, vocational training, and shelter.(45, 46) Coordinate repatriation for victims of human trafficking in cooperation with the Ministry of External Relations.(21) In the case of the Directorate of Social Protection of the Child, oversee 10 regional delegations; the Operational Technical Unit provides social services and maintains Centers for Social Action.(45) In the case of the Minors Brigade, work within the public security sections of local police stations to investigate reports of child trafficking and the use of children in hazardous work.(6, 30, 44)
National Commission on Human Rights and Freedoms	Promote and protect human rights and investigate human rights abuses.(30, 44) Report wrongdoing, advocate for victims, and assist victims of human trafficking with settling lawsuits.(31)
Ministry of Women's Empowerment and Family (MINPROFF)	Enforce criminal laws against forced child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and use of children in illicit activities.(30)
Joint Mobile Brigade	Work to prevent and combat the phenomenon of street children in Yaoundé and Douala by identifying street children, providing temporary shelter, reintegrating them into their families, and educating families whose children have returned home on the root causes of the phenomenon to prevent these children from returning to the streets.(6, 14, 31)
Ministry of External Relations	Provide assistance in repatriating victims of child trafficking in cooperation with MINAS.(31)

Law enforcement agencies in Cameroon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MINLSS) employed 74 labor inspectors, which is insufficient to enforce child labor laws, and significantly less than the 192 inspectors proscribed by its organizational chart.(30) The labor inspectors did not receive training on child labor during the reporting period, although they were educated about the ILO's core conventions during their initial training.(30) The ILO CEACR has also expressed concern that the inspectors are not sufficiently familiar with the labor laws.(1, 47) The Government, with support from UNICEF, developed a draft training curriculum on the rights of children for police and magistrates.(30, 31) It is not known what the MINLSS's budget was for 2014, but an official in the Southwest Region claimed he received approximately $3,600 per year to conduct inspections, which was insufficient given the size of the geographic area under his jurisdiction.(30) Although inspectors have office facilities, they lack other resources and often do not have the vehicles or fuel needed to conduct inspections.(1, 21, 30)

Article 108 of the Labor Code allows inspectors to conduct unannounced visits, and the inspectors did conduct unannounced inspections via site visits in all the sectors allowed by law.(30, 32) However, a 2011 ILO review of Cameroon's labor inspectorate found that few workplace visits had occurred.(47) Article 109 of the Labor Code allows inspectors to take direct legal action and assess penalties for labor violations.(30, 32) The Government conducted inspections in 2014, but it did not publish the number of inspections that occurred, the number of violations found, or the penalties assessed.(30) Additionally, there is no formal referral mechanism between law enforcement and social services, although the authorities work together in practice to ensure that the victims of child labor violations receive the appropriate social services.(1)

Criminal Law Enforcement

It is not known how many investigators the Government employed to enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor in 2014.(30) A local NGO, Nkumu Fed Fed, partnered with the Government and Vital Voices to provide training on human trafficking for the Regional Taskforces on Trafficking in Persons established in 3 of 10 regions.(21) Research found that due to a lack of training, some magistrates and prosecutors were not familiar with Law N° 2011/024 Relating to the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Slavery. As a result, many child trafficking cases were tried as other crimes, which have lesser penalties.(21, 30) Reports from the Northwest and Southwest Regional Taskforce on Trafficking in Persons reported at least 25 new cases of child trafficking and identified 17 victims. Of the 25 new cases, 11 defendants were prosecuted under Law N° 2011/024, and 8 were ultimately convicted.(21, 30) The Government did not provide any publicly available information on the total number of investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions, or penalties assessed for the country as a whole.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The National Referral System established in 2013 refers victims of child trafficking to social service providers. Children who are employed in hazardous child labor outside of the home are also included in the National Referral System.(48) The System establishes the role and scope of the intervention of various players in providing assistance to victims in the short, medium, and long term.(21, 30) During the reporting period, the Government reintegrated 31 victims of child trafficking who were identified in 2013. NGOs identified at least 130 victims, most of whom were placed in shelters, were rehabilitated, or were reunited with their families.(21)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established the Inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC) to coordinate its efforts to address human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee*	Coordinate government efforts to combat child labor and implement the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children (PANETEC).(49, 50) Led by MINLSS.(49)
Inter-Ministerial Committee (IMC)	Coordinate government efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including by training stakeholders, proposing legislation, and ratifying international instruments. The Secretary General of the Office of the Prime Minister chairs the Committee, which includes members of eight Ministries, law enforcement personnel, civil society organizations, and NGOs active in anti-trafficking work.(1, 21) In 2014, created three Regional Taskforces on Trafficking in Persons to serve as coordinating bodies at the regional level.(21)

The IMC did not have its budget approved in 2014, which limited its ability to coordinate among stakeholders and provide oversight to the Regional Taskforces on Trafficking in Persons.(31) The three Regional Taskforces functioned at a grassroots level, although with inadequate funding, which limited their operational capacity.(21, 48)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Cameroon has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children (PANETEC) (2014-2016)	Aims to eradicate the worst forms of child labor by 2016. Targets the elimination of the use of children in illicit activities such as drug trafficking, recruitment of children in armed conflict, and commercial sexual exploitation.(30, 51) Establishes responsible agencies, actions to be taken, timelines, and concrete measures related to preventing child labor and child trafficking. In 2014, conducted awareness campaigns through Regional Taskforces and tightened adoption procedures to reduce the risk of adopted children from becoming victims of human trafficking.(21)
Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Outlines efforts to prosecute and convict human trafficking offenders, to educate law enforcement personnel and social workers, to develop and enact legislation prohibiting the trafficking of adults, and to train enforcement personnel on how to use the human trafficking database.(52)
Decent Work Country Program (2014-2017)†	Incorporates child labor concerns into the strategy for work.(10)
PRSP (2010-2020)*	Includes overall goals of poverty reduction, increased access to health and social services, and improved infrastructure such as education.(53)
Country Program Action Plan (2013-2017)*	UNICEF- and government-implemented program that addresses the full development of young children and builds on the previous Country Program Action Plan. Aims to improve access to quality education, expand employment opportunities, and promote active participation of youth in society.(1, 6, 31) In 2014, continued a national awareness campaign about trafficking in persons and implemented mechanisms to reduce child trafficking in refugee camps.(21)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government formally adopted the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children (PANETEC) in March 2014, it has yet to be implemented, since it has not been allocated a budget.(21) The Prime Minister established an ad hoc committee on child labor to develop a budget for PANETEC, although the members of this committee had not been designated as of December 2014.(30) Other existing policies and action plans related to child labor lack specific details, timetables, and responsible parties.(52, 54)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Cameroon funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms. (Table 8)

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues (2011-2016)	$15 million USDOL-funded 6-year project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. In Cameroon, aims to build the capacity of the national government, to develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor, and to strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers.(55, 56)
National Referral System‡	IOM-funded project to protect domestic workers and victims of child trafficking in Cameroon by providing assistance and referring victims to social services.(30)
Project to Fight the Phenomenon of Street Children‡	MINAS-funded program that gathers information on street children and offers health care, education, and psychosocial care in partnership with the ILO. In 2014, MINAS identified 240 street children and reunited 77 of them with their families. (30)
Centers for Children in Need*‡	MINAS- and MINPROFF -operated shelters for women and children in need. MINAS-run shelters are located in four regions of Cameroon and MINPROFF operates at least one shelter in every region that provides vocational and educational training for girls and women.(31, 57) Victims of child trafficking are placed in MINAS-run shelters and are given lodging, food, health care, psychological care, education, vocational training, and family tracing as appropriate.(21)
Country Program Action Plan (2013-2017)*‡	UNICEF- and MINAS-implemented program aiming to improve social protection by ensuring access to primary education, improving preventative health care, promoting birth registration; also providing shelters and safe drinking water in the northern regions affected by floods.(1, 44) Aims to improve conditions in refugee camps in the East Region by providing education, clean drinking water and sanitation facilities, vaccinations, and by building child-friendly spaces.(30)
School Feeding Programs*‡	Programs funded by USDA, WFP, and the Ministry of Education that provide meals to help improve the educational goals of girls in target geographic zones.(6, 29) Feeding programs funded by WFP and the Ministry of Education benefit an average of 55,366 girls annually in the Extreme North, North, and Adamaoua Regions. (29) The U.S. Embassy in Yaoundé and USDA fund Food for Education, which operates in the North Region and promotes the use of school gardens to improve food security. Since the program began in 2013, it has provided breakfast and lunch to 95,867 primary school students and financed the construction of 497 school buildings, 12 wells.(58)
Direct Cash Transfer*‡	Government program that provides limited direct cash transfers to street children on an ad hoc basis.(29)
Horizons Femmes Project on Domestic Workers*	Government-supported, NGO-run project focusing on educating domestic workers about their rights.(44, 59)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Cameroon.

In 2013, MINLSS evaluated the programs that had been implemented to prevent and combat child labor since 2003, but the results of the study have yet to be released.(1, 6, 31) Although the Government of Cameroon has implemented programs to assist victims of child trafficking and children engaged in street work and in domestic work, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, and funding was reduced during the reporting period.(30) Additionally, research did not find evidence of programs to specifically address child labor in agriculture, mining, and quarrying.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Cameroon (Table 9).

Cameroon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2014
	Criminalize the use of children for illicit activities.	2014
	Ensure that laws are extended to children working in noncontractual employment and hazardous activities are prohibited for all children under age 18.	2014
	Ensure there is not a gap between the age for compulsory education and the established minimum age for work.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce. Ensure sufficient training and resources for inspectors to carry out inspections.	2009 – 2014
	Make information publicly available about the total number of investigators, investigations, violations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties assessed.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure magistrates and prosecutors are familiar with existing laws and prosecute violations of child trafficking under Law N° 2011/024 Relating to the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and Slavery.	2014
	Establish a referral mechanism between law enforcement agencies and social services.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure existing coordinating mechanisms receive adequate funding to carry out their mandates.	2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the PRSP and National Youth Policy.	2010 – 2014
	Fully fund the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking in Children, and ensure that it addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Ensure all policies and action plans related to child labor include a detailed timeline for implementation and designate responsible parties.	2010 – 2014
Social Programs	Ensure all children have access to education by ensuring that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Education is free, by eliminating school-related expenses;</li> <li>■ Schools are free of sexual abuse; and</li> <li>■ All children have access to birth registration.</li> </ul>	2009 – 2014
	Make the decree banning Parent-Teacher Association fees publicly available.	2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2014
	Develop social protection programs that assist children working in agriculture, mining, and quarrying, and expand existing programs to better address the extent of the child labor problem in Cameroon.	2009 – 2014

Central African Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, the Central African Republic (CAR) made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. A cease-fire agreement between armed groups was signed in July, and the Government began drafting a disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration (DDR) strategy with the support of the UN and other international partners, but has yet to fully implement it. However, children in CAR are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment by armed groups. Widespread violence and continued instability limited the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor and armed groups on all sides of the conflict increased their use of child soldiers. Research found no evidence that enforcement actions were taken to address child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Central African Republic (CAR) are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment by nongovernmental armed groups.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in CAR.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	31.0 (373,742)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	63.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	28.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		45.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2010, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(7)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(8)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Working on cassava* and peanut* farms, activities unknown (2, 9)
	Gathering mushrooms,* hay,* firewood,* and caterpillars* (2)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (2, 3)
Industry	Diamond and gold* mining (2, 10, 11)
Services	Domestic work* (2, 12)
	Street work, including carrying heavy loads and market vending (2, 11, 12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Use of children in armed conflict sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment by armed groups (1, 2, 4, 6, 9, 12-21)
	Domestic work, work in agriculture, restaurants, markets, and mining, including diamond mines as a result of human trafficking* (9, 22, 23)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (9, 12, 22, 23)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor of Ba’aka children in agriculture and domestic work* (2, 9) Used in illicit activities, including as spies for armed forces and carrying stolen goods* (1, 12, 20, 24)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In March 2013, Séléka rebels ousted the sitting president and formed a new government.(4, 13, 25-33) The new Government’s president, Michel Djotodia, dismantled the Séléka by decree on September 13, 2013. After this date, the group became known as ex-Séléka.(13, 34) Following Djotodia’s exit from power in January 2014, another interim president was selected by the Transitional National Council.(29, 30, 35) However, armed groups have also continued to perpetrate violence against civilians and engage in fighting with other armed factions despite a cease-fire agreement that was signed July 23, 2014.(6, 36) In addition, the Government has been unable to re-establish state authority throughout the country and armed groups remain in control of large parts of CAR.(6, 20, 29, 32, 37, 38) The changes in leadership, closing of government institutions, displacement of half a million residents, and ongoing conflict have impacted the Government’s ability to address the worst forms of child labor.

Renewed fighting in early 2014, in combination with the resumption of violence in South Sudan, led to reports of continued recruitment and use of child soldiers by armed groups on all sides of the conflict during the reporting period, sometimes as a result of forced or compulsory recruitment.(4, 9, 13, 17, 19, 25, 30, 36, 39, 40) There were no reports of children being recruited into the Government’s armed forces, which remained mostly defunct. A small number of police and gendarme units were trained in close partnership with international organizations and recruits were subject to strict vetting criteria.(6) A report estimates that between 6,000 and 10,000 children are associated with armed groups in CAR, some as young as age eight. Children associated with armed groups are used to carry supplies and serve as combatants, lookouts, and concubines.(1, 12, 17, 18, 20, 41, 42) There are also reports that children from neighboring countries have been recruited by armed groups in CAR, and that children in CAR have been abducted for forced labor and/or forced soldiering by the Lord’s Resistance Army, a Ugandan rebel force that has moved into CAR.(2, 9, 13, 15, 20) However, 2,807 children were released from armed groups in 2014, a significant increase from the number of children released in 2013.(20, 36, 43) The Government worked with the UN Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in CAR (MINUSCA) and other partner agencies to prioritize the demobilization and reintegration into community life of these children.(6)

Although the Constitution provides for free education, associated fees and a severe lack of textbooks, schools, and teachers in rural areas limit access to education for many children. Many schools have been closed for lengthy periods of time and some teachers and civil servants who fled during the conflict have yet to return.(2, 6, 44-47) The recent conflict has also disrupted the academic system and left many schools destroyed, damaged, or looted.(20, 36, 45, 47-49) Birth registration is required for children to enroll in school, but birth registration was not possible in conflict zones. Ex-Séléka members also looted and destroyed the records at birth registration offices throughout the country.(2) Children in many areas have missed almost two years of school and the ongoing conflict has prevented some students from taking their annual examinations, which is how students advance to the next level.(20, 49) Some school buildings are also occupied by displaced civilians, while others were attacked or used by armed groups.(2, 13, 15, 20, 31, 36, 50)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

CAR has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Central African Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 259 of the Labor Code (51)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 263 of the Labor Code (51)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations and/or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 262 of the Labor Code; Article 190 of the Mining Code (51, 52)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 7 of the Labor Code (51)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 151 of the Penal Code (53)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 262 of the Labor Code; Articles 110 and 111 of the Penal Code (51, 53)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 262 of the Labor Code (51)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Legislation title unknown (54)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	No
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Ordonnance N° 84/031 Orienting the Teaching System; Article 7 of the Constitution; Article 13 of Law N° 97/014 Orienting the Education System (55-57)
Free Public Education	Yes		Ordonnance N° 84/031; Article 7 of the Constitution (55-57)

Article 1 of the Labor Code extends protection to all workers in the formal sector with a work contract. Article 261 of the Labor Code mandates that the Ministry of Labor and Ministry of Public Health, in consultation with the Permanent National Labor Council, issue a joint order determining the types of activities and occupations prohibited for children, but this has yet to be issued.<sup>(51)</sup> Article 190 of the Mining Code prohibits children from working in mines and Article 262 of the Labor Code prohibits certain hazardous occupations and/or activities for children according to ILO C. 182.<sup>(11, 51, 52)</sup> However, existing prohibitions are not specific enough to facilitate enforcement. Additionally, Article 111 of the Penal Code and Article 262 of the Labor Code prohibit the use, recruitment, and sale of children for prostitution and pornography, but do not criminalize the possession and distribution of child pornography, nor do they prohibit an individual from benefiting from their proceeds.<sup>(51, 53)</sup> Research did not uncover a public version of the Government's legislation with regard to minimum age for compulsory military recruitment.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, Social Security, and Employment	Monitor and enforce laws related to child labor.(22)
Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Investigate cases of the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation of children, child trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities. The MOJ shares this responsibility with CAR's police forces.(12)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in CAR took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

The ongoing violence in CAR has limited the Government's ability to enforce child labor laws in many areas, especially in areas controlled by armed groups.(6) Government reports indicate that only 18 of the 53 labor inspectors are assigned to enforcement duties, which is insufficient to address the scope of the problem.(58, 59) Research did not find evidence that inspectors received training in 2014. The Government was unable to enforce child labor laws during the reporting period due to a lack of labor inspectorate capacity and inadequate financial and material resources, and violations were common in all sectors of the economy.(2, 58) Labor inspectors are frequently required to bear the costs incurred in carrying out their duties and their offices sometimes lack essential equipment such as doors, lights, chairs, and tables, or are inaccessible when it rains.(59) Although Article 324 of the Labor Code permits unannounced visits, none were conducted in 2014.

The Labor Code does not grant inspectors the authority to determine or assess penalties. Additionally, Articles 346 and 367 of the Labor Code make labor inspectors responsible for the resolution of labor disputes, which may prevent them from dedicating adequate time to their primary duty of enforcing labor laws. This directly contradicts ILO C. 81, which states that labor inspectors should not be responsible for resolving labor disputes.(51, 60) Research was unable to find information on the number of labor inspections, the type of inspections conducted, which sectors were inspected, the number of child labor law violations found, and the number of citations issued.

Criminal Law Enforcement

MINUSCA trained 80 police officers, 46 military personnel, and 21 civilians on child rights and protection. It also conducted awareness-raising programs for 463 combatants in conjunction with UNICEF.(4, 36) However, officers lacked sufficient office facilities and transportation to carry out investigations.(61) Research found no evidence that the Government investigated or prosecuted any suspected cases of child trafficking, nor did it take measures to ensure that the victims of child trafficking were provided with protective services.(9) Information was not available on the number of investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws on the worst forms of child labor, investigations, convictions, or implementation of penalties. Research did not find evidence of a referral mechanism between labor enforcement and social welfare services.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for the Protection of Children	Coordinate policies and strategies to protect children from sexual exploitation and child soldiering. Overseen by the Prime Minister's Office and comprised of government ministries, NGOs, and international organizations.(11, 23, 45)

The National Council for the Protection of Children did not meet in 2014.(62)

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of CAR has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
UNDAF (2012-2016)	Aims to continue peace-building efforts, strengthen the rule of law, and accelerate progress toward the Millennium Development Goals. Commits to improving reintegration activities for child ex-combatants, improving access to protective services for children, and increasing primary school attendance and access to quality education.(63, 64)
National Action Plan for Education for All (2003-2015)*	Aims to improve enrollment and completion rates for primary school. Also calls for the establishment of informal schools in rural areas to provide access to education for children ages 8 to 15 who have never attended school.(45, 65)
National Strategy for the Education Sector (2008-2020)*	Aims to improve access and retention in all levels of education by constructing 800 classrooms per year between 2008 and 2015, improving the quality and effectiveness of education, recruiting additional teachers, encouraging the establishment of private schools, and conducting awareness-raising campaigns that promote the importance of education.(66)
National Poverty Reduction Strategy II (2011-2015)*	Establishes national framework for encouraging growth and reducing poverty. Focuses on promoting security and peace, reviving the economy through regional integration, and developing human capital and social services.(45, 67)
N'djamena Declaration of the Regional Conference: Ending Recruitment and Use of Children by Armed Forces and Groups: Contributing to Peace, Justice, and Development	Represents a commitment among the signatory countries, including CAR, to eliminate the use of child soldiers. All efforts to demobilize and reintegrate child soldiers have been taken under this declaration.(68)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The Government worked with MINUSCA and other partner organizations to begin drafting a disarmament, demobilization, and reintegration strategy for child soldiers. However, the plan has yet to be fully implemented due, in part, to a lack of funding.(6, 11) Additionally, a draft of a national policy addressing the elimination of child labor is awaiting approval.(11) Given the state of insecurity in CAR, it is unlikely that any of the above policies were implemented during the reporting period.

Military leaders of two ex-Séléka factions issued orders in 2014 prohibiting the recruitment and use of child soldiers.(50) However, these orders are only in effect within the area these factions control.(62, 69) The use of children in armed conflict is also prohibited by Article 262 of the Labor Code.(51) However, there have continued to be widespread reports of recruitment of children into armed groups.(1, 2, 4, 9, 12-21, 36)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of CAR participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Education Cluster*†	Funded by UNOCHA and led by UNICEF, develops and coordinates the implementation of an education program in collaboration with the Ministry of Education for schools that are able to reopen. Establishes Temporary Spaces for Learning and Child Protection (ETAPE) in Internally Displaced Persons sites in Bangui to provide safe learning environments and child protection services. As of 2014, established 118 ETAPes for 26,000 displaced children.(47, 48)
Saving Lives and Protecting Livelihoods*†	$91.7 million WFP-funded, 9-month project to provide emergency relief to people who are displaced or food insecure as a result of ongoing violence. Expands existing food distribution programs and provides support for the expansion of basic health and educational services.(70, 71)
Shelters for Unaccompanied Children	UNICEF-supported centers in Bangui that provide immediate care, food, and psychosocial support to unaccompanied children and former child soldiers.(40)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

Although the Government participates in a program that assists former child soldiers, the scope of this program is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. In addition, research found no evidence that the Government has programs to assist children engaged in other worst forms of child labor, largely due to a lack of governmental capacity and funding.<sup>(6)</sup>

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in CAR (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.	2013 – 2014
	Establish a minimum age for voluntary recruitment and make the Government's legislation for a minimum age for compulsory military recruitment publicly available.	2013 – 2014
	Create a list of hazardous occupations and/or activities prohibited for children in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations and ensure that laws are specific enough to facilitate enforcement.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure that laws prohibit possession and distribution of child pornography, and penalize individuals from benefitting from their proceeds.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Strengthen enforcement of child labor laws by: Increasing the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce; Providing inspectors with training on child labor issues; Ensuring adequate resources, including office space and transportation, for inspectors to conduct an adequate number of investigations; Conducting unannounced inspections; Authorizing inspectors to determine and/or assess penalties; and Making data publicly available on the number of investigators responsible for enforcing child labor laws, the number of investigations conducted, convictions made, and penalties assessed.	2009 – 2014
	Establish a referral mechanism between labor enforcement and social welfare services.	2014
	Ensure that labor laws comply with ILO C. 81 and that labor officers have sufficient time to devote to their primary duties of enforcing labor laws.	2014
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat all forms of child labor, including its worst forms.	2011 – 2014

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Chad made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government issued Ordinance 001/PR/2014, which criminalized the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict, and signed a protocol with the UN that includes protections for children associated with armed groups, regardless of their country of origin. The Ministry of Women, Social Action, and National Solidarity also integrated a mandatory course on child protection into the curriculum of training institutions for police, gendarmerie, judges, military personnel, and social workers. Additionally, the UN Secretary General removed Chad from its list of governments that recruit and use child soldiers. However, children in Chad are engaged in child labor, including in cattle herding and agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Many gaps remain in the legal framework and there are no specific laws that prohibit the use of children in illicit activities.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chad are engaged in child labor, including in cattle herding and agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Chad.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	29.6 (1,073,282)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	47.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	18.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		35.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(10)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 4, 2010.(11)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting crops,* activities unknown (1, 3)
	Collecting and chopping wood* (8, 9)
	Herding cattle (1-3, 7)
Industry	Mining*†, including panning for gold (3)
	Building walls* (9)
	Making bricks* (1, 9)
Services	Domestic work (1-3, 5, 7-9)
	Street work*, including vending and carrying heavy loads (1, 2, 9)
	Begging (1-3, 7)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 5-9)
	Forced labor in fishing sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (3, 12)
	Forced labor in domestic work, herding cattle, begging,* street vending,* and work in agriculture* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 5-8, 13)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Child trafficking occurs primarily within Chad, although children are occasionally trafficked to neighboring countries for forced labor in domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 5, 7, 12, 13) Domestically, boys known as mahadjirine may be sent to Koranic schools to receive an education. Some of these boys are forced to beg and surrender the money they receive to their teachers.(1-3, 5, 14)

The Constitution and Law N°016/PR/06 Orienting the Education System mandate free and compulsory education in Chad.(15, 16) However, there is a lack of schools throughout the country and parents are often required to pay for part of teachers’ salaries, textbooks, and other school-related fees, which may prevent some children from attending school.(3)

In 2014, Chad was removed from the UN Secretary General’s list of governments that recruit and use child soldiers.(1, 17, 18) The Government fully implemented the June 2011 Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Children in Armed Conflict and there were no new reports of children being recruited into armed groups.(18) Verification visits conducted by UNICEF and the Government of Chad in military zones across the country confirmed this.(1, 13)

During the reporting period, Chad continued to experience food insecurity and hosted an estimated 526,000 foreign refugees, including adults and children associated with armed conflict, displaced by instability in neighboring Nigeria, the Central African Republic (CAR), and South Sudan.(13, 18-22) The influx of refugees, especially children, from CAR has overwhelmed Chad’s existing social services and shelters, detracting from the Government’s efforts to combat child labor.(1) Given Chad’s limited resources, both of these ongoing situations may affect the Government’s ability to address the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Chad has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 52 of the Labor Code; Article 1 of Decree N° 55 PR/MTJS-DTMOPS Relating to Child Labor (23, 24)

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	16	Articles 6 and 7 of Decree N° 55 PR/MTJS-DTMOPS Relating to Child Labor (23)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations and/or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 6 of Decree N° 55 PR/MTJS-DTMOPS Relating to Child Labor (23)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 20 of the Constitution; Article 5 of the Labor Code ; Articles 286 and 290 of the Penal Code (16, 24, 25)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	No
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 279-282 of the Penal Code (26)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	20	Article 32 of Law N° 06-012 2006-03-10 PR 91 on the Organization of the Armed Forces (27)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 32 of Law N° 06-012 2006-03-10 PR 91 on the Organization of the Armed Forces; Article 52 of Military Statute N°006/PR/06 (27, 28)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Articles 21, 23, 25 and 28 of Law N° 016/PR/06 Orienting the Education System; Article 35 of the Constitution (15, 16)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 9 of Law N° 016/PR/06 Orienting the Education System; Article 35 of the Constitution (15, 16)

Decree N°55 PR/MTJS-DTMOPS Relating to Child Labor prohibits certain hazardous activities for children under age 18, and prohibits other activities for children under age 16. Children ages 16 and 17 can legally be employed in hazardous tasks such as working with hand- or foot-powered machinery, operating machinery with sharp blades, and working on scaffolding in construction sites.(23) Additionally, there are no laws prohibiting child pornography.(26) Articles 279 and 280 of the Penal Code penalize the act of placing a child in a position of “debauchery” or commercial sexual exploitation with imprisonment of two to five years and fines ranging from $200 - $4,000. This language is not explicit in criminalizing the use of children in illicit activities or pornography, however.(26)

In February 2014, the Government issued Ordinance N° 001/PR/2014, which criminalized the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.(13, 29, 30) The Ordinance includes penalties of 5 to 10 years imprisonment and a fine ranging from $200 to $2,000.(31) In September, the Government and the United Nations signed a protocol that includes protections for children associated with armed groups and/or detained during military operations, regardless of their country of origin.(17, 18)

Existing laws and regulations are not sufficient deterrents against the worst forms of child labor. The Government, UNICEF, and local NGOs all support this assessment.(1) A draft of the Child Protection Code and an amendment to the Penal Code are waiting to be ratified by the National Assembly and signed into law by the President. Both laws contain provisions specifically criminalizing child trafficking, and the Child Protection Code criminalizes the use of children in illicit activities.(1, 13, 17, 32-35) The Ministry of Justice and Human Rights worked with the UNODC to draft specific legislation addressing trafficking in persons, which should be completed in 2015.(1, 13) Existing legislation does not explicitly prohibit differentiate between domestic and international human trafficking or prohibit trafficking in persons for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation or forced labor. However, the Government of Chad has used Articles 286 and 290 of the Penal Code to prosecute cases of child trafficking.(1, 25) The Government is also revising the Labor Code to extend protection to children working in the informal sector and update its hazardous work list, which has not been reviewed since 1969. The existing hazardous work list is not specific enough to facilitate enforcement and was not drafted in consultation with employers’ and workers’ unions.(2, 23, 36)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment	Implement and enforce child labor laws.(1, 3)
Ministry of Women, Social Action, and National Solidarity's (MWSANS) Coordination Committee's Children and Justice Working Group	Work to prevent child abuse and endangerment and train government personnel on the rights of women and children, including victims of human trafficking.(1, 12) Provide interim accommodation for children removed from dangerous situations, including child soldiers removed from the military, victims of child trafficking, and children removed from situations of exploitative child labor.(1, 3) In the case of the Coordination Committee's Children and Justice Working Group, coordinate MWSANS's efforts on trafficking in persons, including training, community education programs, and improving the nationwide network of government organizations that address trafficking in persons.(37) In December 2014, the Government of Chad, in coordination with UNICEF, developed training modules and drafted police guidelines for handling cases involving women and children. MWSANS also mapped the judicial and security sectors to identify players and gaps in the system, and trained police officers and Child Protection point of contacts assigned to police stations.(12)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Draft and enforce laws, including child labor laws and laws on human trafficking, which include fines and prison sentences.(1, 3) In the case of the Directorate General of Human Rights, coordinate efforts by local and international NGOs to protect human rights. Chair the Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons (ICTIP).(1, 3)
National Police's Child Protection Brigade	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, including its worst forms. Investigate cases involving women and children, including victims of human trafficking. Brigades are housed in police stations throughout the country.(1, 34)

In 2014, the Ministry of Women, Social Action, and National Solidarity (MWSANS) was combined with the Ministry of Public Health for several months, during which non-emergency programming slowed.(1, 12)

Law enforcement agencies in Chad took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment employed approximately 20 inspectors, who were deployed throughout the country.(1, 34) However, both the Government and local NGOs acknowledge that the number of labor inspectors is insufficient and inspectors receive inadequate training.(1, 3, 38) The International Bureau of Children's Rights (IBCR), in collaboration with MWSANS, held two training sessions from March to April 2014, and November to December 2014, for police officers and Child Protection points of contact at police stations on new police procedures for handling cases involving minors and women.(12) Inspectors did not receive training during the reporting period however, and they do not have adequate financial or material resources, including office equipment, vehicles, and fuel to conduct sufficient investigations outside the capital.(1, 38) The Government also reports labor inspectors spend the majority of their time reconciling disputes, rather than enforcing labor laws.(38) The Labor Code does not grant inspectorates authority to determine or assess penalties for violations.(24)

Although Article 479 of the Labor Code permits inspectors to conduct unannounced visits, this did not occur in 2014. Inspections were typically conducted in response to complaints.(24, 34) Inspectors conducted site visits, primarily to raise awareness on child labor laws rather than inspect work conditions.(1, 34) During the reporting period, the Government did not collect or publish comprehensive statistics on the number of inspections conducted, child labor violations, or citations and penalties.(36) Research did not find evidence of a referral mechanism between labor enforcement and social welfare services.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the National Police's Child Protection Brigade employed 50 labor investigators, and has expanded its presence beyond the original six offices established in 2013. However, the number of investigators remains insufficient to enforce labor laws.(1) UNICEF, MWSANS, and IBCR provided trainings on the rights of children throughout the year. Additionally, MWSANS integrated a mandatory course on child protection into the curricula of training institutions for police, gendarmerie, judges, military personnel, and social workers.(1) In 2014, MWSANS, with support from UNICEF, also provided training on child protection and child trafficking to 1,500 Chadian peacekeepers prior to their deployment to Mali.(13, 18) Despite assistance from UNICEF, which included constructing a headquarters building in N'Djamena and providing computers and other equipment, investigators still had inadequate resources, which hindered their ability to respond to complaints of child labor violations.(1, 13) The judicial system in Chad is underfunded, which makes prosecuting cases of child labor difficult. Courts are generally weak, and in rural areas are largely still governed by traditional laws. As a result, the judicial system is ill-equipped to enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor.(3, 39)

During the reporting period, the Government demobilized 44 child soldiers who fled from CAR militias and provided them with shelter. Some of these children were reunited with their families.(1, 18, 34) The Government conducted a field assessment and investigation to identify and map trafficking in persons circuits, identifying source, destination, and transit regions within the country.(13) Inspectors conducted investigations in four regions in Southern Chad where child labor is most prevalent, which included domestic work, herding cattle, and mahadjirine children from Islamic schools.(1) Three individuals were convicted of child trafficking during the reporting period, including a military officer.(12) The individuals were sentenced to prison terms and at least one individual received a fine as well. Two of the children in these cases were reunited with their families.(1, 12) Additionally, 26 mahadjirine children were removed from Koranic schools and returned to their families.(12) The Islamic teacher was tried but acquitted of child labor violations since he was deemed to be acting within the scope of his religious duties.(1) When victims of child labor violations are found, the National Police refer victims to MWSANS for social services and notifies the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights or the Ministry of Public Service, Labor, and Employment for prosecution.(1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers	Coordinate government efforts to eliminate the use of children in armed conflict.(36) Located in each of the eight military regions, committees are comprised of representatives from MWSANS; Ministries of Justice and Human Rights; Health; Education; the army; gendarmerie; and civil society organizations.(34, 40) Also conduct awareness-raising activities and trainings in the military.(1, 29, 41)
Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons (ICTIP)	Coordinate Government efforts to combat exploitative child labor, including its worst forms and propose revision of national legislation to conform to international standards.(1, 37, 42) Led by the Directorate General of Human Rights and includes representatives from the Presidency; Prime Minister's Office; National Assembly; MWSANS; Ministries of Economy; Planning and Cooperation; Foreign Affairs; Territorial Administration; and Public Security; as well as international NGOs and civil society.(13) The ICTIP's structure is based on recommendations by the UN and modeled after the existing Inter-Ministerial Committee on Child Soldiers.(36)
MWSANS's Regional Child Protection Committees	Coordinate regional government efforts to address the worst forms of child labor.(6, 40) Includes representatives from the Ministry of National Education; Ministry of Justice and Human Rights; and MWSANS, as well as a representative from the police.(1)

The Inter-Ministerial Committee on Trafficking in Persons (ICTIP) is the primary body charged with addressing exploitative child labor. Although the Government merged and renamed several ministries during the reporting period, there was no change to ICTIP's structure and it met four times in 2014.(1, 37, 43) Additionally, MWSANS reports the Regional Child Protection Committees were not very active during the reporting period.(34)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Chad has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
2013 Child Soldiers Action Plan	In partnership with the UN, aims to eliminate the use of child soldiers.(33, 41, 44-46) The Government, in collaboration with UNICEF, created a road map of 10 specific objectives to achieve this action plan and successfully implemented seven of the 10 objectives.(36, 41, 47)
N'djamena 2010 Declaration of Regional Conference: Ending Recruitment and Use of Children by Armed Forces and Groups; Contributing to Peace, Justice, and Development	Represents a commitment among six signatory countries, including Chad, to eliminate the use of child soldiers in their territories.(33, 48-50) Forms the basis for the 2013 Child Soldiers Action Plan and accompanying UNICEF Road Map.(34)

Policy	Description
Child Protection Program (2013-2015)	MWSANS and UNICEF policy which aims to improve the Government's ability to protect women and children in accordance with the Child Protection Code and Ordinance 001/PR/2014, which criminalized the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.(12) Provides training on child labor and child trafficking issues for police, gendarmes, military, social workers, and the judiciary. Under this program, 22 Child Protection points of contact in 28 police stations and the Child Protection Brigade are responsible for collecting data on child trafficking.(12)
National Development Plan (2013-2015)*	Places emphasis on education, economic growth, poverty reduction, improving food security, developing human capital, and creating additional youth employment opportunities.(33, 51) The African Development Bank-funded Project to Support the Education Sector (PASE) provides ongoing training for teachers and strengthens public administration capacities was consolidated into the NDP in 2014.(1, 52) The Government funded three other projects as part of the NDP: (1) Intermediate Strategy for Education and Literacy (SIPEA); (2) Project in support of reform of the education sector in Chad (PARSET); and (3) Project in support of the implementation of the sectoral policy for education in Chad (PAPST). These projects support educational and institutional reform with the aim of achieving universal quality primary education by 2015 by building 1,500 classrooms per year until 2015 and purchasing textbooks and manuals for students.(33) In 2014, the Government conducted a donor appeal that raised nearly $200 million for this plan.(1)
Education Initiative (2000-2015)*	Aims to increase access and equity to schooling and improve the quality of teaching and school infrastructure, with an emphasis on girls and other marginalized groups.(52, 53)
UNDAF (2012-2015)*	Aims to alleviate extreme poverty, improve food security, and increase human capital, particularly for youth and women.(54)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

Although the Government of Chad has adopted policies on child trafficking and child soldiers, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor such as commercial sexual exploitation or forced labor in domestic work and herding cattle.(3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Chad funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms.(Table 8)

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2013-2015)*	Aims to improve work conditions in Chad through the promotion of employment opportunities and strengthening social protection. Emphasizes quality universal primary education and non-agricultural job opportunities.(55)
Transition Center‡	Centers run by the Ministry of Defense that provides family reunification and reintegration assistance to former child soldiers. MWSANS, in collaboration with UNICEF, implements a program for the demobilization and reinsertion of child soldiers.(33, 42, 56)
Reception Centers‡	Centers run by MWSANS located throughout the country that provide temporary assistance to victims of child trafficking, including food, education, medical and psychological care, and reintegration services.(13)
Awareness-Raising Activities‡	Government program that conducts outreach campaigns to raise awareness and prevent child trafficking, the use of children in armed conflict, and the exploitation of children as herders.(3, 33, 57)
Income-Generating Activities‡	Government program that provides grants to women's groups as part of MWSANS's strategy to empower women and children in the fight against child trafficking and gender based violence.(40)
Birth Registration Campaign*	UN-funded program as part of the National Birth Registry Code that conducts birth registrations and deploys mobile registration units. Includes the development of a 2-year strategy for capacity-building in civil registration.(29, 41, 42) The Government, in collaboration with the Chadian Association for the Promotion of Fundamental Freedoms and UNICEF, launched awareness campaigns in 12 municipalities to promote birth registration.(12) The Government also issued birth certificates to Sudanese and CAR refugees living in Chad in July and August.(12)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Chad.

Chad

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although Chad has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to address the extent of the problem adequately, particularly in agriculture, herding, forced begging, and domestic work.(2)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Chad (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure laws differentiate between domestic and international human trafficking, and prohibits trafficking in persons for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation or forced labor.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure laws specifically prohibit children from being used, offered, or procured for illicit activities.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure all children under age 18 are prohibited from engaging in hazardous occupations or activities.	2014
	Ensure laws specifically prohibit the production, distribution, possession, and benefiting from the proceeds of child pornography.	2014
	Ensure the draft Child Protection Code, the revised Labor Code, and the revised Penal Code provide protection to all children engaged in work, regardless of sector.	2009 – 2014
	Periodically review and update as necessary the hazardous occupations and/or activities prohibited for children in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations and ensure it is specific enough to facilitate enforcement.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Strengthen enforcement of child labor laws by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Increasing the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce;</li> <li>■ Providing additional training on child labor issues;</li> <li>■ Ensuring inspectors' primary duty is the enforcement of labor laws;</li> <li>■ Providing adequate resources for inspectors to conduct investigations, particularly outside the capital;</li> <li>■ Proactively planning inspections and including unannounced inspections;</li> <li>■ Authorizing inspectorates to determine and/or assess penalties; and</li> <li>■ Establishing a referral mechanism between labor law enforcement and social welfare services.</li> </ul>	2012 – 2014
	Make statistics regarding the enforcement of child labor laws publicly available, including the number of inspections, prosecutions, violations, and citations/penalties.	2009 – 2014
	Provide law enforcement officials and judges with adequate resources to enforce laws against the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure Regional Child Protection Committees are active.	2014
Government Policies	Adopt a policy to combat all worst forms of child labor in Chad, such as commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor in domestic work and herding cattle.	2009 – 2014
	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Development Plan, Education Initiative, and UNDAF.	2014
Social Programs	Ensure access to education for all children by eliminating school-related fees and improving access to schools throughout the country.	2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2014
	Establish and expand programs providing services to children engaged in child labor, especially in agriculture, herding, domestic service, and forced begging.	2009 – 2014

Chile

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Chile made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government created the Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor, a coordinating mechanism for research and outreach efforts on child and adolescent labor. As part of the ongoing implementation of Education Decree 280 of 2009, indigenous language and cultural education is now required at schools with 20 percent or more indigenous children. The National Minors' Service (SENAME) assisted 1,290 child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. SENAME registered 386 cases in its Worst Forms of Child Labor Registry. Chile also continued to implement several programs targeting the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Chile are engaged in child labor, including in retail, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in illicit activities. The Government has yet to adopt a new national plan against child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Chile are engaged in child labor, including in retail. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in illicit activities.(1-4)

The results of the 2012 National Survey on Activities of Children and Adolescents (Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes) indicate that 70.6 percent of working children ages 5 to 17 are engaged in work classified as hazardous.(1, 3) Thirty-nine percent of children found in the worst forms of child labor are engaged in illicit activities, including in the production and trafficking of drugs.(5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Chile.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	3.8 (94,025)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	99.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		97.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Encuesta de Actividades de Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes Survey, 2012.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting crops, selling crops, and working on agricultural loading docks* (3, 8) Livestock rearing* (3, 8)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Forestry,*† activities unknown (3, 9)
	Hunting,* activities unknown (3, 9)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (3, 9)
Industry	Construction,* activities unknown (1, 3, 8)
	Production of ceramics,* books,* and garments* (8)
	Domestic work (1-3)
	Washing cars* and repairing shoes* (3, 8)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Street work, including street vending and work in retail,* activities unknown (1, 3, 8, 10)
	Used in illicit activities, including in the production and distribution of drugs sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 4, 11)
	Forced labor in agriculture,* mining,* domestic work,* and hospitality sectors* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 8)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 8, 12, 13)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The commercial sexual exploitation of children occurs in cities, in open public areas, and in other venues, such as bars and dance clubs.(2) Child trafficking occurs internally and, to a lesser extent, from Chile to other Latin American countries for commercial sexual exploitation. Girls from other Latin American countries are also trafficked to Chile for commercial sexual exploitation and domestic work.(14) Children are used to transport drugs in the border area with Peru and Bolivia.(8) Limited evidence suggests that children from Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, and Peru are found in forced labor in the agriculture, mining, domestic work, and hospitality sectors.(2) Indigenous children and adolescents from Otavalo, Ecuador, are also vulnerable to trafficking for labor exploitation in Chile.(11)

Data from the Government’s National Minors’ Service (SENAME) indicate that in 2014, approximately 506 children lived on the streets and approximately 2,343 children were found engaging in different activities on streets in the metropolitan region of Santiago. The Santiago region reported the highest incidence of children living and working on the streets.(15-17) However, no information is available on the types of activities children performed while working on the streets.

The Araucania region of Chile experiences the highest levels of poverty; it is also a region with a large indigenous population.(3) There is no recent data available on the percentage of indigenous children engaged in child labor in Chile; the last comprehensive study conducted on child labor among indigenous children in Chile is from 2005.(18)

Limited evidence suggests that access to education is a problem for indigenous children, who are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(19) However, as of 2014, indigenous language and cultural education is required at schools with 20 percent or more indigenous children as a part of the Government’s Indigenous Language Sector Program (Sector de la Lengua Indígena) in the following indigenous languages: Aymara, Mapudungun, Quechua, and Rapa nui.(20)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Chile has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor (cont)

Convention	Ratification
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 13 of the Labor Code (21)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 13–14 and 18 of the Labor Code; Law No. 20.539 (21, 22)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Law No. 20.189; Law No. 20.539 (22)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 2 of Law No. 19.812 (23)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 1 and 411 of Law No. 20.507 (24)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Chapter 6, Article 367 of the Penal Code; Law No. 20.594; Articles 1 and 411 of Law No. 20.507; Law No. 20.526 (25-27)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Paragraph 1, Article 5 and Paragraph 2, Article 19 of Law No. 20.000; Law No. 20.084 (28, 29)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Chapter 1, Article 13 of the Armed Forces' Recruitment and Mobilization Law No. 2.306 (30)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	17	Chapter 1, Article 13 of the Armed Forces' Recruitment and Mobilization Law No. 2.306 (30)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Article 4 of the General Education Law No. 20.370 (31)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 4 of the General Education Law No. 20.370 (31)

Chilean law provides for specific penalties for adults who involve children under the age of 14 in the production or trafficking of illicit drugs.(24, 29, 32)

The minimum age for voluntary and compulsory military service in Chile is 18. Children may register at age 17 for voluntary service, but may enter the service only at age 18.(33, 34) According to the Armed Forces' Recruitment and Mobilization Law, during times of war, the President of Chile may call upon persons of any age to be employed in “services that the nation requires”; however, it is not clear if this provision applies to persons younger than 18 years old. Moreover, the ILO CEACR has suggested that Chile clarify the minimum age for which this provision applies.(30, 34)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Prevision (MINTRAB)	Enforce child labor laws and generate public awareness of child labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 35)
National Minors' Service (SENAME)	Coordinate and provide services for vulnerable children in collaboration with Rights Protection Offices.(36, 37)
National Investigations Police	Oversee regional offices that specialize in investigating sex crimes and cases involving the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Refer children to SENAME.(38, 39)

Organization/Agency	Role
National Prosecutor's Office	Enforce laws and prosecute perpetrators of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(38)
Rights Protection Offices	Refer cases of children whose rights have been violated, and monitor and raise awareness of the worst forms of child labor. Located in municipalities throughout the country and overseen by SENAME.(9)

Law enforcement agencies in Chile took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Social Prevision (MINTRAB) had 112 vehicles and 106 permanent offices and carried out 115,272 inspection visits—a considerable increase from 3,350 in 2013.(11) MINTRAB employs approximately 503 labor inspectors; they inspect for all types of labor violations, including child labor.(1, 11, 40) From January to July 2014, 106 cases of child labor were detected, a decrease from 184 in 2013.(4) MINTRAB imposed 604 fines for child labor violations, including 113 found in retail, 91 in hotels and restaurants, and 92 in manufacturing industries.(4) Six fines were imposed for cases involving minors under age 15, and 131 were for cases involving minors ages 15 to 17.(4, 10)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, 192 cases of commercial sexual exploitation, including cases of child prostitution, pornography, and trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation, were investigated in the Chilean judicial system. A total of 25 criminal convictions for the commercial sexual exploitation of minors also occurred during the same period.(4) In 2014, SENAME assisted 1,290 child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, compared with 1,095 during 2013. SENAME assisted an additional 386 children involved in undisclosed activities whose cases were found in the Worst Forms of Child Labor Registry but were detected by agencies other than SENAME.(4) During the reporting period, there were 291 cases of children and adolescents involved in the worst forms of child labor. Thirty-one percent were involved in illicit activities, including in drug production and drug trafficking; 17 percent were found in hazardous activities; 4.9 percent were found in commercial sexual exploitation; and 10.6 percent were found in other worst forms of child labor not categorized.(11, 41) Thirty-one percent of the reports involved girls and 54 percent involved children over age 15.(4)

In 2014, there were 118 total criminal prosecutions for trafficking in persons, including 115 for the prostitution of minors. There were no convictions for cases involving minors under Chile's trafficking statute during the reporting period.(11) However, there were 22 convictions for the prostitution of minors and 15 for the use of minors in the production of pornography.(11)

SENAME and the Inter-American Institute for Children provided training for technical staff on identifying commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. As a result, the Institute developed a new online course for regional cities, which had 134 users, and an additional 300 participants in its regular in-person courses in 2014.(4, 42) SENAME also conducted a number of trainings with a special focus on immigrant children and trafficking in persons issues, and on child labor prevention, with the Department of Juvenile Justice, the Ministry of Education, and the Ministry of the Interior.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Advisory Committee to Eradicate Child Labor	Formulate the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(9, 43) Led by MINTRAB and includes the following members: SENAME, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Agriculture, and the National Statistics Institute and National Tourism Service (SERNATUR), as well as the National Investigations Police and the National Uniformed Police.(43)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Worst Forms of Child Labor Task Force	Evaluate and promote programs that prevent and protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Receive financial and technical assistance from the ILO.(36, 44) Oversee the Worst Forms of Child Labor Registry, which tracks incidents of the worst forms of child labor and provides information on programs designed to assist child workers.(45, 46) Includes implementing a multisector protocol for the identification, registration, and care of victims of the worst forms of child labor.(31)
Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate the Government's anti-human trafficking efforts; led by the Ministry of the Interior. Members include law enforcement agencies, the National Prosecutor's Office, the Ministry of Foreign Relations, the Ministry of Justice, and SENAME, among others.(47)
National Observatory of Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Conduct and publish research on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, in collaboration with the Government and civil society; led by SENAME.(1)
Social Observatory to Eradicate Child Labor*	Established by Decree No. 131 to coordinate child and adolescent labor issues among working groups, foundations, educational study centers, and institutions. Conduct technical studies on child and adolescent labor issues and evaluate current child labor elimination policies.(48) Disaggregate child labor survey data from the 2012 National Survey on Activities of Children and Adolescents.(48) Includes two full-time staff members and an operating budget of $150,808.(4)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

In 2014, the Worst Forms of Child Labor Task Force met nine times.(4)

The National Observatory of Commercial Sexual Exploitation met eight times in 2014. The Interagency Task Force on Trafficking in Persons also worked with SENAME to provide assistance for a possible case of human trafficking involving an Ecuadorian minor.(4)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Chile has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Second Framework for Action Against the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (2012–2014)	Aims to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children and promote coordination among government agencies and NGO service providers. Adopted by the Ministry of Justice, SENAME, and other government agencies and NGO partners in 2012.(9, 49, 50)
National Action Plan Against Trafficking in Persons	Implements actions to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, with a focus on women and children.(11) Encompasses four strategic areas: (1) prevention and awareness raising, (2) control (prosecution), (3) victims' assistance and protection, and (4) interinstitutional cooperation and coordination.(11)
Cooperative Agreement for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of Adolescent Workers in Chile Between the Ministry of Labor and Social Prevision and the Ministry of Education	Creates mechanisms to detect child labor within the school system in the capital region. The Ministry of Education and MINTRAB are signatories to the agreement.(51)
Chilean Ministry of the Interior and Public Security and U.S. Department of Homeland Security Joint Statement on Trafficking in Personst	Proposes to increase collaboration among enforcement agencies to target and eliminate human trafficking enterprises. Seeks to enhance information exchanges between Chile and the United States on human trafficking.(52)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor† (2014-2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Chile at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(53-55)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government has policies aimed at trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation, it has still not enacted a second National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor. However, during the reporting period, the National Advisory Committee began drafting this plan.(4, 43)

In September 2014, Chile participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. Held in Bridgetown, Barbados, these discussions promoted the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector, uphold workers' rights, and prevent and eliminate child labor.(56)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
SENAME Programs for Children at Risk of or Engaged in the Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	More than 90 SENAME programs for disadvantaged youth and children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(9, 44) In 2014, SENAME continued funding 17 projects to treat victims of commercial sexual exploitation in 10 regions, as well as the Regional Initiatives Against Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children (CSEC), run by Raices, the EU, and the Chilean Agency for International Cooperation, and other organizations.(1, 4) Projects are implemented in collaboration with municipal governments and involve 126 local branches of the Office for the Protection of Children's Rights. Programs also include continued support and sponsorship of a program.(4, 36)
Caring Chile Programs ( Chile Solidario )*‡	Ministry of Social Development programs implemented by Chilean NGOs to combat poverty. Includes several social welfare programs, including the Bridge Program (Programa Puente), which helps families in extreme poverty, and the Opening Paths (Abriendo Caminos) program for children who are separated from their families.(57)
Child Labor Survey on Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Collaboration of the Government with the ILO to collect data from police and other governmental agencies for a preparatory study on commercial sexual exploitation.(1, 13)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2014)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen capacity and decisionmaking to meet the goals of the Hemispheric Agenda for Decent Work in Latin America.(58)
Eradication of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011–2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to contribute to the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labor and Protection of Permitted Adolescent Work in Latin America.(58)
Strengthening Social Dialogue as an Effective Tool to Address the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012–2015)	$760,000 Government of Ireland-funded, 3-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that focuses on strengthening social dialogue on the worst forms of child labor in different regions of the world, including Benin, Chile, Fiji, Ghana, and Zambia.(58)
24 Hours Program ( Programa 24 Horas ), formerly called the New Life Program ( Vida Nueva )*‡	Ministries of Education and Health, Department of Juvenile Justice, and Service for Clinical Intervention program in eight cities that aims to address delinquency among children age 14 and younger.(59) Targets children who have been used by adults to carry out illegal activities.(9, 50) Aims to provide integrated intervention for children who have been detained by the police for such activities, but are not subject to the juvenile justice channels because of their age.(59)
Regional Action Group for the Americas	Prevention and awareness-raising campaigns to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Latin America. Members include Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Paraguay, Peru, Suriname, Uruguay, and Venezuela.(60, 61) Administered in Chile by SERNATUR, which conducts child labor prevention and awareness-raising campaigns in the tourism sector.(1)
Indigenous Language Sector Program ( Sector de la Lengua Indígena )*‡	Ministry of Education program that aims to increase the quality of education available to indigenous children. In 2014, pedagogical guides for the fourth basic education course were published in Aymara, Mapudungun, Quechua, and Rapa nui.(20)
Extended School Day Program ( Programa 4 a 7 )*‡	National Women's Service extended school day program that aims to keep children off the streets while their parents are at work, among other goals.(62)
MERCOSUR Southern Child Initiative	Initiative to defend the rights of children and adolescents in the region by raising awareness and seeking coordination among member states on the worst forms of child labor and migrant labor, by improving the country's legal frameworks to harmonize them with international conventions affecting children, and by exchanging best practices.(63)
Ethical Family Income Program‡	Ministry of Social Development income assistance and conditional cash transfer program to assist 170,000 families in extreme poverty.(9, 64) Other programs provide scholarships and social services to children from low-income families, and to adolescent parents and children of incarcerated parents who are at high risk of leaving school to enter work.(9)

Program	Description
Guides on Eliminating Child Labor and Safe Work for Adolescent Workers	MINTRAB collaboration with the Confederation of Production and Commerce (CPC), one of the country's largest business associations, and the Chilean Safety Association (ACHS) to fight against child labor. The CPC distributes guides to employers on eliminating child labor through public-private partnerships, and the ACHS has developed a manual promoting safety for adolescent workers and has distributed this information widely.(38, 65)
Government Projects for At-Risk Youth in the Dominican Republic ( Proyecto de Emprendimiento Juvenil )*‡	Government project supported by the Government of Chile that improves the employability of disadvantaged, at-risk youth through training and internship opportunities to promote entrepreneurial and job-related skills.(66, 67) In 2014, designed a training course on self-employment for youth and trained 25 training facilitators in two towns in the Dominican Republic.(42)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Chile.

Results from the Child Labor Survey on Commercial Sexual Exploitation are still not available.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Chile (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Adopt a new national plan against child labor.	2011 – 2014
Social Programs	Assess the impact that various social protection programs may have on the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working on the street and in retail to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Conduct research on the prevalence of child labor in the Araucania region and on vulnerable populations' access to education in the region.	2013 – 2014

Colombia

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Colombia made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed Law 1719, which guarantees access to legal services for victims of commercial sexual exploitation and armed conflict; implemented Child Labor Pacts to assist in the formulation of child labor policies and laws and improve coordination between the Ministry of Labor and other government agencies; and launched the Network Against Child Labor campaign to unite 14 businesses in efforts to eliminate child labor in their supply chains. The Government also continued to participate in a project to combat child labor and improve workplace health and safety in mining. However, children in Colombia are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work, and in the worst forms of child labor as they continue to be forcibly recruited by illegal non-state armed groups. Limited interagency coordination and inadequate resources hinder Government efforts to combat child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Colombia are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work.(1, 2) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in armed conflict, as they continue to be forcibly recruited by illegal non-state armed groups.(3, 4)

The 2014 National Household Survey, released in 2015, includes estimates of the number of working children in Colombia. The results show a small reduction in child labor, from 9.7 percent in 2013 to 9.3 percent in 2014.(5) However, the results do not disaggregate information on health, occupational safety, geographical areas, or sectors in which children work, particularly the priority sectors identified by the Government for child labor reduction such as coffee, sugarcane, and tobacco. Data are also not collected on child labor for hard-to-reach populations, including street children and children involved in illicit activities. Government survey data on working children include limited information on indigenous populations, and obtaining these data in these communities may be challenging due to the Government’s political relationship with different indigenous groups.(6)

Several government officials in different departments of Colombia reported that due to a lack of training and resources, they have not updated the Ministry of Labor’s (MOL) Information System for Identification, Registration, and Characterization of Child Labor (SIRITI) in the past three years. Therefore, comprehensive data on child labor available to the public is incomplete and outdated.(7-9) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Colombia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	5.9 (514,092)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	93.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	5.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		105.0

	Used in armed conflict, sometimes as a result of force, in illegal non-state armed groups, to perform intelligence and logistical activities, store and transport weapons, and engage in commercial sexual exploitation (3, 4, 30, 31)
	Used in illicit activities, including by gangs to commit homicides and traffic drugs (32)
	Illegal sale of gasoline*† (12)
	Forced begging* (29)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Indigenous and Afro-Colombian children are considered the most vulnerable children in Colombia and are engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(12, 23) There are an estimated 102 indigenous groups, of which 87 are recognized by the State and indigenous organizations, 12 are recognized only by indigenous organizations, and 3 are self-recognized.(33) Indigenous children in Colombia sometimes migrate temporarily to cities and work in street vending, garbage scavenging, construction, and commercial sexual exploitation.(19, 29) They are also sometimes trafficked to Peru to cultivate coca.(9, 19)

The commercial sexual exploitation of minors, especially females, is a problem in Colombia, primarily in the departments of Amazonas, Antioquia, Atlántico, Cundinamarca, Bolívar, Magdalena, and Valle Del Cauca.(34) Colombian government officials reported that school classmates, children's friends, gang members, school teachers, parents, local officials, hotel receptionists, and motorcycle taxi drivers sometimes recruit and use children for commercial sexual exploitation. Officials also reported that children's school classmates and other adults falsely recruit children to participate in musical performances and take vacations, but exploit those children in commercial sexual exploitation.(35, 36)

Research indicates that in the Triple-Border region (Colombia, Peru, and Brazil) of Colombia, young Colombian girls and boys often enter alone Tabatinga, Brazil by foot and Santa Rosa, Peru by canoe where they engage in commercial sexual exploitation and illicit activities. Children cannot return to Colombia at night, as canoe access to Colombia closes from 6 pm to 6 am every day.(7, 36) As a result, children are exploited in commercial sexual exploitation in Peru as they are unable to return to Colombia at night.(7, 36) Boys in the city of Leticia, Amazonas also engage in commercial sexual exploitation outside of hair salons, where perpetrators pay them less than $1 to perform sexual acts.(35, 36) Data from cases from the Colombian Administrative Process for Reestablishing Rights indicate that from 2011 to 2013, there were 1,061 cases of commercial sexual exploitation of female adolescents and 113 cases of male adolescent victims.(37) In other cities such as Cartagena, children who are also gang members, are used by other gang members to commit homicides. If the children do not commit homicides, they are then forced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation.(32)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Research indicates that few child victims of commercial sexual exploitation file complaints with officials, and therefore, the scope of the problem is underestimated in the country. Some officials report that some children are intimidated and do not file complaints since many of their recruiters are children's classmates and friends.(38)

Children from the departments of Amazonas and Nariño frequently travel across the border to Peru to work in the cultivation of coca and illegal drug production. Sometimes these children are trafficked to perform these activities.(23, 35) A government official estimated that children were engaged in this activity during the reporting period, but no information is available on how many children were trafficked to perform this work.(23)

Reports indicate that in the cities of Cali and Medellín, numerous children work on the streets.(20, 21) A report also indicates that many children ages 10 to 17 are engaged in domestic service in third-party homes. These children may work up to 60 hours per week with little to no pay, access to school, or health benefits.(39, 40) In the beach areas of the city of Cartagena, children, many of whom are Afro-Colombians, sell fruits and handicrafts and offer services such as massages and hair braiding to tourists. Many times, individuals purchase the children's goods and services in exchange for sexual acts.(9, 32) In addition, government officials in Cartagena reported that children sell food and carry heavy loads in urban markets, beginning work as early as 3 am.(9, 32)

The Government of Colombia and the Armed Revolutionary Forces of Colombia (FARC) began peace negotiations in 2012. Despite a temporary halt in peace talks in November 2014, negotiations resumed in early December.(41-47) In 2014, 250 children were recruited by the FARC and the National Liberation Army (ELN).(31) The Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF) reported that 277 children were separated from the FARC and ELN during the reporting period.(47) The peace negotiation does not address the continued recruitment of children into the ranks of the FARC. There is also evidence that illegal non-state armed groups use bullying as a strategy to recruit children from schools, and underage girls as couriers to collect extortion payments.(48-50)

In Colombia, access to education is hindered by the internal armed conflict and sometimes impassable routes and long distances between children's homes and schools in rural areas.(51-53) In 2014, the UN reported that there were 12 cases of schools damaged in the cross-fire as a result of confrontations between illegal non-state armed forces and the Colombian Armed Forces.(46) The 2012 National School Desertion Survey for children enrolled in primary and secondary school identified child labor as one of the primary causes of school desertion in the Caribbean and Pacific regions of Colombia.(54) Access to education is also a problem for children from different ethnic groups. There are 68 native languages in Colombia; a 2014 report from a Colombian NGO indicates that more than 80 percent of ethnic groups in the country do not have access to a culturally and linguistically relevant education.(55)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Colombia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In May 2014, Colombia ratified ILO Convention 189, Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers.(56)

The Government of Colombia has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 35 of the Code of Childhood and Adolescence (57)

Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 13 of Law 418 of 1997; Article 2 of Law 548 of 1999 (61, 62)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Decision C-376/10 of the Colombian Constitutional Court (63, 64)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of Decree 4807 of 2011 (64)

In 2014, the Government issued the Victims Assistance Decree, which aims to regulate the procedures for government entities responsible for protecting and providing assistance to victims of human trafficking. It also addresses victims' access to services, protection, and assistance through interagency coordination and partnerships with civil society members.(65) However, the law stipulates that human trafficking victims must file an official complaint against their trafficker within 5 days of initiating the immediate assistance program in order to receive extended assistance and services.(65) The limited time allowance and the requirement to file an official complaint may prevent victims from receiving sufficient assistance.

The Government also enacted Law 1719 of 2014, which guarantees access to legal services for victims of commercial sexual exploitation and armed conflict. Article 5 of Law 1719 stipulates that persons found guilty of using victims of armed conflict in commercial sexual exploitation may incur 160 to 324 months of imprisonment, and a fine of $169,000 to $380,000.(66) Article 6 of Law 1719 also stipulates penalties for perpetrators of trafficking in persons for commercial sexual exploitation of 156 to 276 months of imprisonment and a fine of $203,000 to $380,000.(66)

Colombian legislation relevant to the worst forms of child labor undergoes frequent changes. However, it is not clear whether those changes are effectively disseminated to the general public or to relevant groups including enforcement officials, employers, and civil society organizations.(67)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL) Inspection, Monitoring, Control, and Territorial Management Department	Receive complaints of labor law violations and conduct labor inspections, including inspections to verify labor conditions for adolescent workers and compliance with other child labor provisions. Operate a child labor monitoring system, independently of the labor inspection system, that identifies children engaged in or at risk of child labor.(68) In 2014, created the Internal Working Group on Child Labor Eradication with inspectors to focus on the eradication of child labor, including by carrying out prevention activities; conducting child labor inspections; and compiling data on child labor.(69)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of the Interior (MOI)	Operate a hotline to report and track cases of human trafficking, coordinate investigations, and facilitate access to social services for victims.(70)
National Police	Investigate cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(22, 68)
Colombian Institute for Family Well-Being (ICBF)	Receive complaints regarding child labor, operate hotlines to report cases of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation, and provide social services to children engaged in or at risk of child labor. Operate 40 mobile units to coordinate government actions to protect children's rights, including with respect to child labor. Partner with civil society organizations to operate an Internet hotline to combat child commercial sexual exploitation and pornography.(71, 72)
Attorney General's Office	Investigate cases of child recruitment for armed conflict, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking.(57) In 2014, the Articulation Group for Combatting Trafficking in Persons was created to focus on investigation and prosecution of international trafficking and other related crimes. The Group includes four prosecutors from specialized directorates in the Attorney General's Office.(4)
Office of the Ombudsman	Promote rights of children and adolescents and monitor policies related to children's human rights. Operate an early warning system to prevent the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.(57)
Ministry of Health and Social Protection	Provide health services to victims of sexual violence, including child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(73)
National Training Service (SENA)	Collect fines imposed by the MOL for labor law violations.(74)

Law enforcement agencies in Colombia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

For 2014, the MOL reported that there are 904 inspector positions, with 726 filled during the reporting period; however, the MOL has also verbally reported other numbers that are lower. Given the size of the Colombian workforce, the number of inspectors per worker is inadequate.(47)

Some reports indicate that all inspectors received training in child labor issues during the reporting period; however, in departments such as Amazonas and Bolívar, regional MOL officials indicated that labor inspectors have not received training in child labor issues in the past several years.(7, 47) In 2014, labor inspectors conducted 1,527 inspections related to child labor.(47) As a result of these inspections, from January to November 2014, five child labor violations were found, some of which involved more than one child. The MOL removed 3 children and 87 adolescents from worksites that did not comply with labor laws; it also issued five sanctions for a total of approximately $100,000.(47) The MOL did not report whether these children and adolescents were referred to any social services. In addition, the National Training Service did not report whether fines were collected for these or any child labor infractions.(47) Inspections are conducted reactively, through complaint mechanisms, and can also occur unannounced. Inspectors may also conduct follow-up inspections of past labor violations. However, data are not disaggregated on the number of unannounced and complaint-driven labor inspections.(47) Reports indicate that labor inspectors still lack the resources to fully carry out all their duties.(7, 8, 75)

No information is available on how many children the MOL's Fundamental Labor Rights Monitoring system identified in child labor.(76) Research also did not uncover the number of child labor complaints that the ICBF received, nor how many children were provided with services.(72) Although the ICBF refers cases of apparent child labor violations to the MOL for further action, it is unclear whether the MOL conducts any follow-up, including whether labor inspectors use this information to target their inspections.(72)

In some departments of Colombia, inspectors only carry out inspections in a small fraction of the department. For example, in Amazonas, inspectors only conduct inspections in the municipality of Leticia. Inspectors do not have resources to carry out inspections in any other areas of the department, which are only accessible by canoe trips or by small, private planes.(7)

In order to combat child labor in the mining sector, the ICBF requires its regional offices to coordinate with the MOL's regional offices and other government agencies. It also requires its regional offices to collaborate with labor inspectors in the periodic inspections of mines and quarries, provide social services to children found working, and notify the relevant MOL authorities of any apparent child labor infractions that the ICBF identifies.(77) However, it is unclear whether such coordination occurs in practice.

Recent National Household Surveys have found that many adolescents work without permits, despite a requirement that adolescent workers between 15 and 17 years old obtain a work permit. In 2012 and 2013, 5,753 and 2,193 work permits respectively, were issued to adolescents.<sup>(6)</sup> The Government has suggested that it needs to target inspections where adolescents are working.<sup>(6)</sup>

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the National Police had 657 officers, 53 police guards, and 57 referral officers dedicated to investigating crimes against children, including child labor and its worst forms. Agents carried out 1,753 investigations.<sup>(47)</sup> As a result of the investigations, child victims were assisted, but no information is available on the exact number of children.<sup>(47)</sup>

During the year, the National Police initiated nine trafficking investigations, which remain under investigation with the Attorney General's Office. Six of the cases were for transnational human trafficking for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and three were for internal human trafficking for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation involving 26 suspects.<sup>(4)</sup> No information is available on whether these cases involved minors.<sup>(4)</sup> The MOI's Anti-TIP Operations Center identified 74 victims of transnational human trafficking; 12 of the victims were minors.<sup>(4)</sup> No information is available on whether these transnational trafficking cases involved labor or commercial sexual exploitation, or on whether they were prosecuted or any convictions were made. The MOI's Human Trafficking Hotline received 6,043 calls in 2014, and Colombian authorities identified 62 victims of human trafficking, including at least 2 children.<sup>(4, 34)</sup> No information is available on whether the children were victims of commercial sexual exploitation or forced labor, or how many of these children received services.<sup>(4)</sup> The Government has acknowledged that it lacks adequate resources to effectively conduct investigations and prosecutions of human trafficking cases. Furthermore, the Government has limited resources to assist victims.<sup>(4)</sup>

The ICBF identified 108 cases of child commercial sexual exploitation in which 54 cases were related to child pornography. Research did not uncover whether these cases were a result of calls to a hotline.<sup>(70)</sup> No information is available about how many investigations, prosecutions, or convictions the Government conducted related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.

In 2014, there were reports of 48 convictions for illegal forced recruitment in armed conflict and 7 convictions for commercial sexual exploitation. However, it is not clear if the convictions included children.<sup>(47)</sup> Research also did not uncover whether the convictions were a result of investigations carried out in 2014. Child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and illegal forced recruitment for armed conflict received assistance from the ICBF.<sup>(70)</sup> The Attorney General's Office reported 327 new cases of illegal forced recruitment during the reporting period, and 217 of these cases involved children.<sup>(4)</sup> The Ministry of Defense, in partnership with UNICEF, trained members of the Colombian Armed Forces on children's rights. As of April 2014, 25 battalions received training.<sup>(78, 79)</sup>

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National System of Family Well-Being	Promote interagency coordination to protect children's rights, including related to child labor. Design, implement, monitor, and evaluate policies that affect children from early childhood to adolescence. <sup>(80)</sup>
Interagency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (CIETI)	Coordinate efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the MOL; includes 13 government agencies and representatives from trade unions, business associations, and civil society organizations. <sup>(81)</sup>
National Interagency Committee for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Implement direct efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Coordinated by the MOL; includes 11 government agencies and representatives from business associations, trade unions, and civil society organizations. <sup>(82, 83)</sup>
Interagency Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Lead efforts to combat human trafficking. Chaired by the MOI and includes 14 government agencies. <sup>(84)</sup> In 2014, the MOI presided over a committee meeting for the first time since the creation of the committee in 2005. <sup>(85)</sup>
Interagency Committee for the Prevention of the Recruitment and Use of Children by Illegal Armed Groups	Coordinate efforts to prevent child recruitment by non-state armed groups, including for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation. Led by the Office of the Vice President and composed of more than 21 government agencies. <sup>(86, 87)</sup>

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Office of the Inspector General	Monitor the implementation of child labor laws and policies, including the National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(57)

In 2014, the Government created a permanent group made up of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), ILO, Department of National Planning, National Department of Statistics, Ministry of Agriculture, Ministry of Health, and MOL to coordinate with universities to research the types of labor that may be permitted for minors in the coffee, cotton, sugar, and rice sectors.(47)

During the reporting period, the National Interagency Committee for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Commercial Sexual Exploitation conducted numerous outreach and training activities for a multitude of stakeholders, including government officials, children, and parents.(47)

The 2013 evaluation of the National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2008–2015) indicates that the ICBF, CIETI, and the MOL demonstrated the highest rates of participation in coordination activities.(6) However, regional Government officials recognize that there continues to be a lack of coordination and information exchange between regional ICBF and MOL offices and the national headquarters.(7-9)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Colombia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategy to Prevent and Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2008–2015)	Lays out Colombia’s strategy to combat the worst forms of child labor in nine priority sectors: coffee, tobacco, sugarcane, mining, street work, garbage scavenging, illegal sale of gasoline, commercial sexual exploitation, and recruitment of children by illegal non-state armed groups.(81, 88) In 2014, the Department of National Planning (DNP) published the results of the 2013 evaluation of the National Strategy to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor, which highlights advances in training and awareness raising of child labor among government officials and society in general.(6)
National Policy to Prevent the Recruitment of Children and Adolescents by Illegal Armed Groups	Directs actions to prevent the recruitment and use of children by illegal non-state armed groups. Calls for the Government to develop strategies to protect children from recruitment, address violence against children (including the worst forms of child labor), and improve interagency coordination.(89)
National Development Plan (2010–2014)	Outlines Colombia’s strategy to promote economic growth and social inclusion. Includes the goal of reducing the number of working children by 35 percent (from 1,768,153 to 1,149,300).(90) In December 2014, members of the DNP met with academic and industry stakeholders and drafted the National Development Plan for 2014–2018.(91, 92)
10-Year National Plan for Children and Adolescents (2004–2015)	Aims to increase children’s access to social services and reduce the number of children engaged in child labor.(93)
National Strategy to End Extreme Poverty	Seeks to lift 1.4 million families out of extreme poverty by 2014 and includes combating child labor as a goal.(94, 95) By 2014, 3.8 million families were calculated to be in situations of extreme poverty, which is a reduction of 2 million families since the inception of the strategy.(96)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014-2024)†	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories’ efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by Colombia at the ILO’s 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(97-99)
Colombia Network Against Child Labor ( Red Colombia contra el Trabajo Infantil )†	Forms collaboration between Colombian businesses, MOL, and the ICBF to eliminate child labor in supply chains. Initiated with 14 business in 2014, and aims to include 500 businesses in 2015.(100, 101)
Fight against Human Trafficking Agreement between the Government of Colombia and the Government of Argentina†	Establishes a work plan between the governments of Colombia and Argentina to collaborate in the fight against human trafficking. Signed in July 2014, aims to prevent human trafficking and to strengthen efforts to assist Colombian human trafficking victims found in forced labor in Argentina.(102)

Policy	Description
Illegal Mining, Drug Trafficking, Inequality, and Poverty Elimination Agreement between the Governments of Colombia Peru†	Outlines 11 objectives to combat issues of illegal mining, drug trafficking, inequality, and poverty in Colombia and Peru. Several objectives focus on child and adolescent labor protection, including identifying and assisting children and adolescents working in mining activities and in vulnerable situations.(103) In addition, establishes a roadmap to apply concepts from the Cooperation Agreement on the Exchange of Experiences and Good Practices regarding labor and labor relations, including child labor.(103) As part of the agreement, officials from both countries developed an information and coordination exchange to develop a Binational Peru-Colombia Child Labor Registration System.(103, 104)
Territorial Assistance Plant†	Increases interinstitutional capacity to address child labor issues in regions and departments. Coordinates regional working groups in 17 departments to collaborate with the Interagency Committee for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor on the implementation of public policies related to child labor and children's rights.(47) Provides training on child labor laws and policies in distant regional areas.(47)
Child Labor Pacts (2014-2018)†	Calls for formulation and design of policies on the prevention and eradication of child labor and for improved coordination between the MOL and other government agencies such as the ICBF; Ministry of Education; Ministry of Health; as well as the ILO and Colombia's National Association of Industries. Also calls for awareness-raising activities in capital cities and tourist destination to address forced child labor issues in priority sectors and for provision of technical assistance to departments for training on services and laws related to combatting child labor.(47)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

A report from the Colombian Office of the Inspector General indicates that some of the country's departments and main cities have neither fully implemented the National Strategy to Prevent and Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor nor allocated funding for child labor initiatives.(105) Moreover, officials in some of the country's departments correlate difficulties in implementing child labor policies to the lack of current reliable data available on child labor in their department. Regional government officials report that a lack of resources and training on the updating of the MOL's SIRTÍ has contributed to this situation.(7-9) The Child Labor Pacts, approved in 2014, aim to address implementation and policies in the country's departments; however, research indicates that departmental government officials have no information on how to implement the Child Labor Pacts.(47)

During the reporting period, the National Strategy to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2013–2018) remained in draft form. This strategy outlines the responsibilities of the Interagency Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, departmental committees, international organizations, civil society, and academia to address human trafficking.(4)

In September 2014, Colombia participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. Held in Bridgetown, Barbados, these discussions promoted the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector, uphold workers' rights, and prevent and eliminate child labor.(106)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Colombia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating and preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms. (Table 8)

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
More Families in Action ( Más Familias en Acción )‡	Development for Social Prosperity (DPS) conditional cash transfer program that seeks to combat poverty and build human capital. Implements specific strategies to prevent child labor in mining and fight teen pregnancy; supports poor families with disabled members; and improves child nutrition.(107) In 2014, served 2,676,386 families and 4,807,772 children and adolescents.(108) Also provided support to 100 percent of the homes (1,050 homes) in the indigenous community of Totoró.(109, 110)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Program	Description
United Network program ( Red Unidos )‡	National Agency to Combat Extreme Poverty program that coordinates actions to reduce inequality and end extreme poverty, including through access to education, health, and job training. Continued projects under agreement with the Telefónica Foundation to prevent child labor in eight cities.(95)
Healthy Generations ( Generaciones con Bienestar )‡	Children's rights program by DPS and the Colombian Institute for Healthy Families that offers cultural and recreational activities to children ages 6 to 17 identified as vulnerable to child labor and recruitment by non-state armed groups.(109)
Thriving Cities for Children and Adolescents ( Ciudades Prósperas de los Niños, Niñas y Adolescentes )‡	DPS and ICBF program that prevents child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and the recruitment of children by non-state armed groups.(109, 111)
Youth in Action ( Jóvenes en Acción )*‡	DPS technical job training and conditional cash transfer program for vulnerable urban youth ages 16 to 24. In 2014, 152,370 youth benefitted from the program.(108, 109)
We are a Treasure ( Somos Tesoro Project )	USDOL-funded, $9 million, 4-year project to combat child labor and promote safe work in the mining sector, implemented by Pact, Inc., in partnership with the Alliance for Responsible Mining, Mi Sangre Foundation, and Fund for Environmental Action and Childhood. Works with the Government of Colombia to 1) strengthen national policies to combat child labor in the mining sector; 2) improve governmental capacity to identify and address violations of child labor and occupational safety and health laws in the sector; and 3) provide education and livelihood opportunities for households vulnerable to child labor in mining communities in the departments of Antioquia and Boyacá.(112) In 2014, initiated baseline studies to collect information in intervention areas on the prevalence of child labor, mining practices, institutional capacity to combat child labor, and attitudes toward child labor; aims to benefit more than 20,000 children and 10,000 households.(113)
National Household Survey‡	National Administrative Department of Statistics annual national household survey that includes questions on child labor.(1)
Decent Work Program‡	MOL project implemented by the ILO to promote decent work, including combating child labor, and social dialogue.(114, 115)
Education Assistance*‡	In 2014, the Government's budget for education was increased by 9.1 percent, from $12.21 million to $13.32 million.(116)
School Meals Program ( Programa de Alimentación Escolar [PAE] )*‡	Ministry of Education program that provides meals to more than 4 million school children to increase school retention. In 2014, project members met to discuss objectives and strategies with different partners and institutions working on nutrition and food security policy.(117, 118)
Fund to Assist Children and After-School programs ( Foníñez )*‡	Superintendency of Family Subsidy afterschool programs for children. Research did not uncover how many families participated in the program in 2014.(119)
I Have Rights ( Yo Tengo Derechos )	Department of Atlántico child labor awareness raising program that actively searches for children who work or are at risk of working, and strengthens interagency coordination through a one-stop center to handle child labor cases.(120)
Ingruma Indigenous Training Center	ICBF and USAID social reintegration program for demobilized indigenous youth. Provides specialized services for indigenous youth who were victims of child soldiering.(121)
Child Labor in Mining Prevention Program	Secretariat of Mining and Office of Infancy, Adolescence, and Youth program in Antioquia that has provided 438 children with life skills training, legal and psychological support, and recreational activities to prevent and eradicate child labor in the mining sector.(122)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Colombia.

Although the Government of Colombia has implemented programs to eliminate child labor in mining, the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and the recruitment of child soldiers, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children in sectors such as coffee, tobacco, sugarcane, garbage scavenging, and the illegal sale of gasoline.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Colombia (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Provide up-to-date information about changes in child labor laws to the general public and relevant groups, including enforcement officials, employers, and civil society organizations.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that victims of human trafficking have sufficient time to, or are not required to, file official complaints against their traffickers to receive services beyond emergency care.	2014
Enforcement	Strengthen monitoring and enforcement of laws related to child labor, including by:	2009 – 2014
	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Increasing the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.</li> <li>■ Making information publicly available about child labor law enforcement efforts, such as the number and amount of fines imposed by the MOL and collected by SENA for child labor violations, as well as the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking of children.</li> <li>■ Using information from the child labor monitoring system to target labor inspections and taking enforcement actions to follow up on child labor cases reported by the ICBF.</li> <li>■ Improving coordination between the ICBF and the MOL to enforce child labor laws in the mining sector.</li> <li>■ Ensuring that labor inspectors have adequate resources to perform inspections and that inspectors receive training on child labor issues.</li> <li>■ Providing disaggregated data on the number of unannounced and complaint-driven inspections.</li> <li>■ Providing adequate resources to criminal law enforcement officials to conduct investigations and secure convictions for cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children and child trafficking.</li> </ul>
	Coordination		Ensure that there is an exchange of information among coordinating bodies at the national and regional levels.	2012 – 2014
	Government Policies		Encourage municipalities and departments—including through financial and technical assistance incentives—to implement the National Strategy to Prevent and Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor, with a focus on identified priority sectors.	2010 – 2014
	Social Programs		Institute programs to address child labor and the worst forms of child labor in the identified priority sectors for child labor eradication and assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2012 – 2014
			Expand awareness-raising efforts to encourage filing of complaints against commercial sexual exploitation of children.	2014
			Ensure that all children identified by the MOL through inspections and its child labor monitoring system and child victims of commercial sexual exploitation receive appropriate social services.	2012 – 2014
Expand efforts to improve access to education for all children, particularly for indigenous and Afro-Caribbean children, and for children in rural areas and in the Caribbean and Pacific regions.		2013 – 2014
Ensure that children are protected from internal armed conflict while in school.		2013 – 2014
Collect more disaggregated survey information about activities in which children and adolescents work—including information about health, occupational safety, and other risks—as well as about geographical areas and sectors where children work, particularly in priority sectors.		2010 – 2014
	Conduct studies on the worst forms of child labor about which information is currently lacking, including activities such as adolescent work, street work, recruitment of children by illegal non-state armed groups, and children's involvement in other illicit activities.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Comoros made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government approved the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking, which strengthened penalties for child labor and child trafficking. The Law also provides legal protection and social assistance to victims of the worst forms of child labor and child trafficking. The Government also increased the coverage of the Police Morals and Minors Brigade by establishing new brigades on the islands of Anjouan and Moheli, where the majority of human trafficking cases reportedly occur. However, children in Comoros are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work. A gap between the minimum age for work and the age for compulsory education leaves children ages 13 to 15 vulnerable to child labor. Limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws impede government efforts to protect children from the worst forms of child labor. Social programs to combat child labor are also insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Comoros are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-3) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work.(1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Comoros.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	23.0 (42,145)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	81.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	20.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		79.8

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2008, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2012.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Seeding,† weeding,† and harvesting,† particularly in the production of manioc, beans,* vanilla,† cloves,† and ylang-ylang*† (1, 2, 8, 9)
	Capturing and processing fish*† (1, 8, 10)
Industry	Extracting and selling marine sand*(1)
Services	Domestic work*† (1, 2, 8-10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced labor in domestic work,* street vending,* baking,* fishing* and agriculture* (1, 2)
	Used in illicit activities, including drug trafficking *(2)
	Commercial sexual exploitation*sometimes as a result of human trafficking*(1, 2)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined hazardous by national law or regulation.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Some parents who are unable to care for their children send them to wealthy families that are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling to the children in exchange for housework. In practice, some of these children receive care and an education, while many become domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(1, 2, 10) In Comoros, it is a traditional practice to send children to Koranic teachers to receive an education. However, some Koranic teachers, force their students to work; girls usually perform domestic work, while boys perform agricultural labor.(2, 10, 11)

Although the Constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education, in practice this provision is not enforced effectively, as many children do not attend school.(1, 8) Also, the lack of school infrastructure and limited availability of teachers impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 8, 9, 12)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Comoros has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 129 of the Labor Code(13)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 7 of Law 14-034 to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (14)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		List of Dangerous Occupations (15)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 2.1 of the Labor Code (13)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 131 of the Labor Code; Articles 345-348 of the Penal Code; Article 13 of Law 14-034 to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (13, 14, 16)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 131 of the Labor Code; Article 323 of the Penal Code; Article 8 of Law 14-034 to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (1, 10, 13, 14)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 131 of the Labor Code; Article 6 of Law 14-034 to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking (13, 14)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 41 of Law No. 97-06/AF (17)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Article 2 of the Outline Act on the Education System (18)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of the Outline Act on the Education System; Preamble of the Constitution (18, 19)

* No conscription (20)

Article 129 of the Labor Code establishes the minimum age for work and apprenticeship as 15, but this does not apply to children performing light work in domestic work or agriculture, as long as the work does not interfere with the children's education, or with their physical or moral development.(8, 13, 16, 21) Children in Comoros are required to attend 6 years of primary school, through age 12. Since the minimum age for children to work is 15, children ages 13 to 15 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they may have completed primary school but are not legally permitted to work.(3, 8, 16, 22)

In December 2014, the Government adopted the Law to Combat Child Labor and Trafficking, bringing Comoran law into compliance with international standards on the worst forms of child labor.(14, 23) The law prescribes penalties of up to 10 years' imprisonment and a fine up to $11,000 for those convicted of the worst forms of child labor, a punishment sufficiently stringent and commensurate with the penalties prescribed for other serious crimes, such as rape. The Law also provides legal protection and social assistance to victims of the worst forms of child labor and child trafficking.(14)

A new Anti-Trafficking in Persons law has been developed, but it was not approved during the reporting period.(2, 24) A proposal to ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons was submitted to the National Assembly, but it was also not approved during the reporting period.(5, 23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Enforce child labor laws, investigate allegations of child labor, and refer cases for investigation.(1, 10)
Police Morals and Minors Brigade (PMMB)	Investigate allegations of child abuse, including child trafficking, and refer cases for prosecution.(1, 2, 5)
Ministry of Justice	Prosecute criminal cases.(10)

Law enforcement agencies in Comoros took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed three labor inspectors, one for each of the three islands.(25) Given the prevalence of child labor in the country, the number of labor inspectors is inadequate. MOL inspectors organized training workshops for the Regional Committees Against Child Labor on laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms.(25) No labor inspections were conducted and no citations were issued for violations of child labor law during the reporting period.(8) In addition, reports indicate a lack of equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct effective child labor inspections and legal proceedings.(23)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Government of Comoros established new Police Morals and Minors Brigades (PMMB) to investigate child abuse and exploitation on the islands of Anjouan and Moheli, where the majority of trafficking cases reportedly occur.(2, 5) No information was found regarding the total number of criminal investigators. PMMB investigators in Grand Comore Island were trained on trafficking in persons issues.(23) The number of criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor is unavailable. Research did not find whether a referral mechanism exist between criminal law enforcement and social welfare services. In addition, reports indicate a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to effectively conduct criminal law enforcement efforts related to the worst forms of child labor.(23)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee Against Child Labor	Coordinate government efforts on child labor, including the implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor.(10)
Regional Committees Against Child Labor	Identify cases of child labor and violence against children, and educate communities on child labor.(26)
Monitoring Group for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate actions against trafficking in persons and provides rehabilitation services to victims at the national level.(2) Headed by the Secretary General of the Government and reports to the Cabinet on a weekly basis on progress in implementing the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan.(10) Members include the Government Human Rights Officer, and representatives of the Ministries of Education, Interior, Justice, Foreign Affairs, and Health; the Police, Gendarmes and child protection NGOs.(10)

In 2014, the Monitoring Group for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons organized a series of public awareness and education campaigns on child trafficking and abuse.(2, 24) The Regional Committees Against Child Labor were active to various extents; for example, the regional committee in Anjouan organized workshops to raise awareness on child labor in the fishing and marine sand extraction sectors.(25) Research did not determine whether the National Committee Against Child Labor was active during the reporting period.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Comoros has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat Child Labor (NAP) (2010-2015)	Aims to harmonize labor laws, mobilize groups to combat the worst forms of child labor, promote universal primary education, address family poverty, and collect systematic information on the worst forms of child labor.(8, 27)
Anti-Trafficking in Persons Action Plan	Includes the goals of enhancing the legal framework to prevent human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation; effectively implementing laws, providing effective protection and care for victims; and raising awareness of trafficking in persons.(10, 28)
National Plan on Education for All in 2015	Includes the goal of universal primary education, and integrates strategies that target child labor.(3, 8, 16)
Poverty Reduction and Growth Strategy Paper*	Includes goals such as reducing poverty and increasing access to social services, such as education and preventative health.(29, 30)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

A new Poverty Reduction and Growth Strategy Paper that includes the goal of eliminating the worst forms of child labor has been developed, but it was not approved during the reporting period.(25)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Comoros funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and forced labor in Comoros.(31) In 2014, the project supported the Government in organizing awareness raising campaigns and training workshops on child labor.(32, 33)

Although Comoros has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Comoros (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.	2014
	Establish a minimum age for children performing light work in domestic work and agriculture.	2012 – 2014
	Raise the compulsory education age to 15 to be equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Increase the resources, training, and number of criminal law investigators and labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2014
	Collect and make publicly available information on the number of PMMB criminal investigators; law violations and penalties assessed; as well as criminal investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014
	Establish a referral mechanism between criminal law enforcement agencies and social welfare services.	2014
	Carry out inspections to enforce compliance with the laws addressing child labor.	2009 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure that the National Committee Against Child Labor actively carries out responsibilities related to the worst forms of child labor.	2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing education and child protection policies.	2014
Social Programs	Ensure that all children have access to education by establishing and implementing a program to address the lack of teachers and schools.	2014
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem, particularly in agriculture and domestic work.	2009 – 2014

Congo, Democratic Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, the Democratic Republic of the Congo made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government took steps to implement a UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers, including by convening national and provincial working groups, appointing a presidential adviser on sexual violence and child recruitment, and arresting several individuals on charges of recruiting and using child soldiers. However, children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo continue to engage in child labor, including in domestic work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in the forced mining of gold, cassiterite (tin ore), coltan (tantalum ore), and wolframite (tungsten ore). The Government failed to prosecute or convict any individual of child labor violations, and the prescribed penalties for forced or compulsory labor remain low and do not serve as a deterrent. There are few social programs to assist child laborers, and laws and regulations mandating free primary education are not enforced.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Democratic Republic of the Congo are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced mining of gold, cassiterite (tin ore), coltan (tantalum ore), and wolframite (tungsten ore).<sup>(1-5)</sup> Children are also forcibly recruited by armed groups, including through abduction, for use in armed conflict.<sup>(2, 3, 6-8)</sup> Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	16.9 (3,327,806)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	67.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	16.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		72.8

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

	Used as child soldiers, sometimes as a result of forced recruitment by armed groups (2, 3, 8, 36-39)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2014, members of indigenous and foreign armed groups—including Rayia Mutomboki, Allied Democratic Forces (ADF), Forces Democratiques de Liberation du Rwanda (FDLR), Nduma Defense du Congo (NDC/Cheka), Union des Congolais Patriotes pour la Paix (UPCP), Force de Résistance Patriotique en Ituri (FRPI), the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA), Forces populaires congolaises (FPC/AP), and various Mayi Mayi groups (Nyatura, Shetani, Simba “Morgan,” Kifuafua, Kata Katanga, Yakutumba, Cheka, Alliance des patriotes pour un Congo libre et souverain (APCLS), Forces de defense des droits humains (FDDH), and Forces de defense Congolaise (FDC)—continued to abduct and recruit children in North Kivu, South Kivu, and Orientale Provinces to be used in their units; the recruitment of children in Katanga Province is assessed to be largely underreported.(3, 8, 38-40) Children associated with armed groups serve as combatants and bodyguards for army commanders, as well as porters of ammunition, cooks, spies, miners, domestic workers, and sex slaves. Children also monitor military check points, cultivate crops, transmit messages, and loot villages after attacks.(3, 18, 23, 39, 41-46) The LRA abducted Congolese children for use by the group in the country, as well as in Sudan, South Sudan, and Central African Republic.(2, 3, 45, 47) The ADF kidnapped children, known as bazana or slaves, from areas peripheral to their control, who then became the personal property of the group’s leader.(39) The UN confirmed one case of child recruitment by the Congolese National Army (FARDC) in 2014—a 17-year-old in Rutshuru Territory in January 2014 who participated in combat against Mayi Mayi Nyatura before being demobilized in April 2014—which marks a significant reduction from previous years.(1, 3, 8, 48)

Armed conflict hinders children’s access to education in the eastern region of the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Some children are forcibly recruited from schools to serve as child soldiers, and some are victims of sexual violence on their way to and from school.(8, 25, 35, 49) Some schools have closed or have been destroyed because of armed conflict.(8, 23, 38, 40, 49, 50) Some schools are also physically occupied by armed forces and used as barracks and operations bases, which places children in the vicinity at risk of engaging in the worst forms of child labor.(8, 37, 38, 40, 49, 50) In addition, the dearth of schools and long travel distances to get to schools prevent some children from receiving an education.(51)

Article 43 of the Constitution establishes the right to free education in all public establishments. President Kabila’s August 2010 declaration and circular of September 2010—under which all direct costs of primary education are to be waived outside of Kinshasa and Lubumbashi—are not being universally implemented.(27, 51-53) In practice, schools generally require payment of tuition and additional fees, including funds to cover teachers’ salaries, for all grades.(1) Even in areas where free primary education is provided, it is often oversubscribed and under-resourced.(54) Children engage in various kinds of work, such as artisanal mining, to pay their school fees.(13) The cost of uniforms may also deter children’s enrollment.(55) In addition, because the compulsory education law is not systematically enforced, children – including those below the minimum age of employment – may enter the workforce and engage in the worst forms of child labor.(56)

Access to education may also be constrained by the lack of birth registration. Unable to prove citizenship, nonregistered children may have difficulty accessing services, such as education, and are more vulnerable to being recruited into armed conflict and other forms of child labor.(44) According to the Government’s 2010 Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, only 29 percent of children in rural areas and 24 percent of children in urban areas are registered at birth.(57) UNICEF noted that only 25 percent of attended births in medical facilities were registered by the Government between 2013 and 2014; in certain provinces, the percentage of children under age 10 who were not registered was nearly 90 percent.(3) Moreover, lack of identification documents makes age verification difficult during FARDC recruitment campaigns and also hinders efforts to identify and separate children associated with armed groups.(48) Approximately 2.6 million people were internally displaced in the Democratic Republic of the Congo in 2014.(58) Internally displaced children may have difficulty accessing education, which puts them at increased risk of engaging in child labor.

A comprehensive, stand-alone child labor survey has never been conducted in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.(42)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Democratic Republic of the Congo has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Act No. 86/005 (56, 66)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 43 of the Constitution (52)

The laws of the Democratic Republic of the Congo are not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Penalties prescribed for the use of forced or compulsory labor in Article 326 of the Labor Code—a maximum penalty of up to 6 months' imprisonment and/or a fine—are low and do not deter violations.(32, 43, 50, 67)

Children are required to attend school only up to age 15. This standard makes children who are 15 years of age who do not have an apprenticeship particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.(59, 66) In addition, the Government did not pass the necessary implementing decree for the Child Protection Code, which contains many relevant protections for children.(25)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In April 2014, the Council of Ministers approved a draft law to establish specialized mixed chambers to try war crimes and crimes against humanity, including the recruitment and use of child soldiers, and presented it to the National Assembly for adoption and enactment in May. Citing technical concerns, Parliament rejected the legislation and awaits resubmission of corrected text.(68)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Insurance (MOL)	Investigate cases related to child labor, including its worst forms.(3, 18, 46)
Ministry of Gender, Family and Children (MOGFC)	Oversee and investigate cases related to the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(3, 27, 46) Provide social services to vulnerable populations, including street children and child soldiers.(3) Receive referrals of child workers found during inspections, and work with NGOs to reintegrate them into communities and reunite them with their families.(3, 7, 18) Sensitize communities to welcoming and reintegrating former child soldiers.(3) A technical team within the Ministry's Secretary General's office is responsible for overseeing and investigating child trafficking cases.(3) In the case of the Department of Child Protection, operate a database to monitor and coordinate children's rights activities and implement programs targeting orphans and vulnerable children.(69, 70)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (MOJ)	Enforce criminal laws related to forced labor, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(18, 46)
National Police	Enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(7)
Special Police Commissariats in Kinshasa, Kisangani, and Goma	Run by female police officers, these units protect victims of rape, assist children abandoned by their families after being denounced as witches, help abandoned women, and pursue husbands who have abandoned their families.(45)
Ministry of Defense	Investigate and use military courts to prosecute military officials suspected of recruitment and use of child soldiers or forced labor of civilians. Implement the UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers.(3)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in the Democratic Republic of the Congo took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed 200 labor inspectors, 75 percent of whom were posted in Kinshasa.(1, 3) There are also 20 labor controllers in the Katanga mining region.(7) According to the Government, the number of labor inspectors is not sufficient given the size and remoteness of the country.(1, 3, 7) Labor inspectors often do not have adequate funding, staff, facilities, communications infrastructure, and means of transportation to conduct inspections.(1, 3, 7, 46, 71) Labor inspectors did not receive training on the worst forms of child labor during 2014.(18) The MOL does not have a system to track child labor complaints and did not keep records of child labor investigations during the reporting period.(1) Research did not find information regarding the type of inspections conducted, the quality of inspections, or the number of unannounced inspections made. Each inspector is required to prepare one annual inspection report, but this report does not necessarily include information on child labor.(27) Information on the number of complaints, inspections, citations, and prosecutions related to child labor is not publicly available.(11, 18) The Government does not facilitate cooperation between inspection services and the justice system, resulting in a lack of information on whether penalties were applied to labor violations.(71, 72) In 2012, the last date for which information is available, the Department of Child Protection within the Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and National Solidarity (MINAS) employed 57 people at the national level and 8 at the provincial level.(70) Research found no information on whether MINAS investigated cases of child trafficking or whether there were any trafficking prosecutions or convictions during the year.(3) Research was also unable to uncover whether MINAS employees received training. In December 2014, MINAS was eliminated as a ministry in a government reshuffle and its responsibilities were assumed by the Ministry of Gender, Family, and Children (MOGFC).(73)

Criminal Law Enforcement

Research found no information on whether the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) and MOGFC investigated cases involving the worst forms of child labor. The justice system faces major challenges with regard to independence, resources, and training, which leads to impunity for crimes committed in the country.(3, 18) Investigators in the MOGFC and the MOJ were not trained on the worst forms of child labor during the reporting period.(18) In 2012, the last date for which information is available, the MOJ was allocated a budget of less than 2 percent of the national budget, an increase of 1 percent from 2011.(70, 74) The Government lacks procedures for identifying victims of the worst forms of child labor and referring them to social services.(44)

Military courts have failed to prosecute any individual for suspected recruitment and use of child soldiers since 2006, despite holding numerous individuals in custody based, in part, on allegations of such crimes.(48) The Government did, however, take steps to initiate criminal proceedings in several cases during the reporting period. Following an arrest warrant issued by the Military Prosecutor in November 2013, former rebel group Nyatura Commander Sieru Muchomba Bahani—accused of recruitment and use of children—was arrested in Equateur Province in February 2014 and awaits trial.(40) In 2014, FARDC Brigadier General Goda Supka Emery was indicted by the High Military Court in Kinshasa with crimes against humanity and war crimes, including the recruitment of children.(8) In April 2014, suspected child recruiter Mahanganiko Kasai (alias “Manga”), of the armed group Patriotes Résistants Mayi Mayi (PRM) was arrested and awaits trial in Ndolo military prison.(75) In August 2014, Colonel Habarugira Rangira Marcel, a senior Nyatura commander accused of recruitment and use of children, was arrested by the FARDC in North Kivu.(40) After years of delay, the trial against Lieutenant Colonel Bedi Mobuli Engangela commenced in August 2014 in the Military Court of South Kivu. In December 2014, he was charged with and convicted of crimes against humanity, but not with child recruitment, despite existing evidence and advocacy by the UN Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO).(40)

Some children associated with armed groups were detained, interrogated, and beaten, despite the enactment of a directive that requires that all children in detention for their association with armed groups be immediately transferred to the UN.(8, 38, 46) For example, in March 2014, the Commander of FARDC’s Kamina Camp refused to hand over 44 children identified as associated with Mayi Mayi groups that surrendered to the FARDC. In April 2014, in response to a letter from the Vice Prime Minister requesting the FARDC to facilitate UNICEF and its partners’ efforts to demobilize and reintegrate children, 24 children were separated, but 20 remained at a military base for an additional period of time.(38, 46) In another documented case, a 17-year-old boy formerly associated with FRPI was severely beaten by a FARDC soldier.(40) In 2014, the UN and Congolese partners secured the release of 121 children from government detention centers; many of these children were detained because of alleged association with armed groups.(3, 8)

In 2014, MONUSCO trained 183 members of the Congolese National Police, as well as 1,514 FARDC soldiers, on child protection and the UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers.(3) A foreign government provided training on human rights law, including human trafficking, to 121 police officials, who were subsequently deployed to the mining, border, and territorial police; the foreign government also trained more than 585 FARDC members on the issue of child soldiers.(3)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NCCL)	Coordinate activities that include compiling data on the nature and extent of child labor, preventing and withdrawing children from engaging in the worst forms of child labor, conducting public awareness campaigns, and building the capacity of Government officials and civil society to combat exploitative child labor.(27, 70) Led by the MOL and composed of members from the Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and National Solidarity (MINAS); MOJ; local NGOs; and civil society.(18)
Ministry of Defense’s Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Commission (UEPNDDR)	Coordinate the identification, verification, and release of child soldiers by collaborating with the UN Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, UNICEF, and NGOs.(3, 46) Refer identified children to these partners. U.S. Embassy contacts report, however, that coordination is not led by UEPNDDR, but by international and local partners in the field.(3) Provide a signed “attestation” stating the demobilized children have completed a reintegration program.(3)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Joint Technical Working Group (JTWG) on the Implementation of the UN-backed Action Plan	Coordinate implementation of the UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers. Led by Ministry of Defense and includes representatives from the Ministry of Interior, MOJ, MINAS, MOL, and MOGFC, among others. Held 12 meetings and was replicated on the provincial level in three provinces in 2014.(3)
Provincial Worst Forms of Child Labor Committees in Kasai Oriental, Kolwezi, and Mongbwalu	Coordinate activities to combat child labor at the provincial level.(70)
Provincial JTWG on the implementation of the UN-backed Action Plan	Coordinate implementation of the UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers at the provincial level. Established in North Kivu, South Kivu, and Orientale in 2014.(3)

During the reporting period, the National Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (NCCL) neither met nor received funding from the central Government.(1, 11, 18) In 2010, the MOL issued a decree nominating members for the NCCL's permanent secretariat. However, research found no evidence demonstrating that this decree had been implemented.(27, 70) In October 2013, the Government published a decree authorizing the creation of committees to combat child labor at the provincial level and extending applicable MOL activities to the provinces.(3, 18) However, the Government has not funded the three existing provincial committees and did not establish additional committees during the reporting period; research found no evidence that the existing committees were operational in 2014.(11, 70)

The national Joint Technical Working Group (JTWG) that oversees implementation of the UN-backed action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers held 12 meetings during the year and appointed two FARDC officers to serve as child protection focal points in North Kivu.(3) In March 2014, the Ministry of Interior and Security issued a letter to provincial governors requesting they put in place provincial JTWGs in order to ensure the implementation of the action plan.(40) Provincial JTWGs were established in South Kivu in June, in North Kivu in August, in Orientale in September, and in Katanga in October.(3, 40) In July 2014, President Kabila appointed Jeanine Mabunda Liyoko as presidential adviser on sexual violence and child recruitment, and provided funding for the establishment of her office.(1, 3, 8, 68)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2012 – 2020)	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo by 2020. Promotes the enforcement of legislation on the worst forms of child labor, awareness raising, education, prevention and reintegration services, and monitoring and evaluation efforts.(27, 36)
UN-Backed Action Plan to End the Recruitment and Use of Child Soldiers	Seeks to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers within the Government's security services, including the armed forces. Implemented by the Ministry of Defense, the four components of this action plan include identifying children serving in the armed forces, providing reintegration services to those children, establishing accountability measures against the perpetrators, and creating a partnership framework for the UN and the Government.(3, 18, 37, 46, 76, 77)
National Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration Plan	Established in December 2013; amended in July 2014 to revise the process of disarmament and demobilization to require the verification and separation of children associated with armed groups as soon as their armed groups surrender or they are captured.(3, 40)
Human Rights Due Diligence in Mineral Supply Chains	In 2011, the Government, representatives of artisanal miners, mineral buyers and traders, and civil society groups signed a code of conduct to increase transparency and prohibit the employment of children in mines.(70, 78) The Ministry of Mines established a multi-stakeholder validation process to provide baseline certification of artisanal sites as free of illegal taxation by armed groups or criminal Congolese National Army (FARDC) elements, dangerous work conditions, and child labor. Of the more than 175 sites that had been assessed by the end of 2014, well over 100 mines received a "green" or acceptable rating following the baseline assessment, indicating, among other things, that child labor was not present.(3, 79) The initiative does not include protocols for assisting child victims of forced labor on the inspected sites.(79)

Policy	Description
National Action Plan for Orphans and Vulnerable Children (2010 – 2014)*	Aims to provide orphans and vulnerable children with improved access to education and psychosocial, medical, and nutritional support.(69, 80)
Growth and Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (2011 – 2015)*	Seeks to improve living conditions and access to social services for vulnerable groups, including children, by 2015.(51)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

The National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor has not been comprehensively implemented, largely due to the Government’s failure to budget adequate funding. As a result, implementation is dependent on external support, which has not been received. In addition, Parliament has not passed legislation implementing the action plan, limiting the plan’s effectiveness.(1, 81) In addition, although three provincial committees have action plans to combat the worst forms of child labor, research was unable to obtain any information to assess the implementation of those plans.(27, 70)

UN sources reported that the Government cooperated fully and collaborated closely with the UN to identify and remove children from the FARDC, allowing frequent and often unfettered access to its bases. During the reporting period, FARDC commanders proactively requested that UN agencies and partners screen for children in certain locations.(3) The UN recorded the removal of at least 1,030 children from armed groups in 2014, largely as a result of surrenders following the FARDC’s military efforts against armed groups.(3) In February 2014, the FARDC issued a special edition of its newsletter dedicated to children and the actions taken to implement the UN-backed action plan.(40)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Program to Demobilize, Disarm, and Reintegrate	Government program that receives support from USAID, the World Bank, Sweden, and Japan through the end of 2015; aims to reintegrate children associated with armed groups in North and South Kivu.(27) Throughout 2014, the Government worked with the UN and local partners to separate at least 1,030 children from armed groups and transport them to NGO-run centers for temporary housing, care, and vocational training prior to returning them to their home communities.(1, 3, 8) With USAID support, UNICEF provided services to 2,172 children who separated from armed groups during 2014.(82)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in the Democratic Republic of the Congo.(83)
Growth with Governance in the Mineral Sector Project‡	Government-implemented project that aims to eliminate child labor and the presence of children from mines in Kolwezi by raising awareness of child labor among parents and by providing children with extracurricular activities, school catch-up classes, school clubs, and income-generating activities for families.(84)
Street Children Project	$10 million World Bank–funded, 5-year project to prevent children from engaging in street work and provide support services for street children.(69)
Decent Work Country Program (2013 – 2016)	$44.5 million ILO-implemented program to contribute to the consolidation of peace and reconstruction in the Democratic Republic of the Congo by promoting decent work that integrates social protection in a context of broader social dialogue and respect for national and international labor standards. Prioritizes the promotion of decent work for girls and boys in a post-conflict context of sustainable development and improved labor productivity by promoting social dialogue, fundamental principles and rights at work, and social protection. Will provide advocacy for the adoption and the implementation by the Government of a National Action Plan to combat the worst forms of child labor.(85)
School Rehabilitation Project*‡	Government project that provided $100 million to rehabilitate 1,000 schools across the country.(86)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

The Government works with international partners to provide assistance and support to demobilized child soldiers, but the programs are not sufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. Reintegrated child soldiers remain vulnerable to re-recruitment, as stigmatization, threats from former colleagues, and lack of adequate rehabilitation services for children suffering severe psychological trauma may lead them to rejoin their old unit or to be recruited by another armed group. UNICEF partners report that nearly 10 percent of child soldiers who completed their programs are re-recruited by armed groups.(2, 3, 39) More than half of the child soldiers returning from armed conflict do not have access to reintegration services, and the programs available do not adequately respond to the medical, psychological, and economic needs of former child soldiers.(42) Limited evidence also suggests that girls do not enter Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration (DDR) programs because they fear being stigmatized and lack awareness about their rights and options.(35, 87) The UN and other organizations have called on the Government to make DDR more accessible and effective for girls.(42, 88)

Despite the Katanga Provincial Ministry of Interior's effort to manage a center for street children in Lubumbashi, children continued to live and work on the streets in Katanga and throughout the country. There is a need for the Government to strengthen its efforts to provide street children with food, shelter, and health care.(24, 25, 70, 73) Child labor in artisanal mining is prevalent in the provinces of Katanga, Eastern and Western Kasai, North and South Kivu, and Orientale.(1, 2). However, research did not find evidence of any social programs to protect these children. The existing multi-stakeholder validation process of artisanal mining sites does not include protocols for assisting child victims of forced labor identified on the inspected sites.(79)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Laws	Raise penalties for the use of forced or compulsory labor to deter violations.	2013 – 2014
	Raise the compulsory education age to 16 to be equivalent to the minimum age for work.	2013 – 2014
	Issue appropriate decrees to ensure that enacted laws are implemented.	2013 – 2014
Enforcement	Implement President Kabila's August 2010 declaration and Circular No. MINEPSP/CABMIN/008/2010 that provide for free and compulsory education.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that the MOJ; MOGFC; and MOL have sufficient funding, staffing levels, communications infrastructure, facilities, transportation, and training to carry out their mandate and address the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Systematically collect, monitor, and make available information on child labor complaints, types and numbers of inspections conducted, citations issued, prosecutions undertaken, and the application of penalties.	2009 – 2014
	Facilitate increased cooperation between the inspection services and the justice system to enable appropriate law enforcement action to be carried to completion.	2014
	Establish procedures for identifying victims of the worst forms of child labor and referring them to social services.	2013 – 2014
	Bring to justice and hold accountable those individuals who have recruited and used child soldiers, including through timely and systematic investigation and prosecution.	2014
	Implement directive N05/00/CAG/ANR/195/2013, which requires that children in detention for their association with armed groups be handed over to UN child protection actors for reintegration.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Implement the 2010 decree to nominate members of the NCCL's permanent secretariat and ensure that the NCCL meets on a regular basis.	2014
	Establish committees to combat the worst forms of child labor in all provinces and ensure that the committees and the NCCL are funded.	2012 – 2014
Government Policies	Continue to implement the code of conduct that prohibits the employment of children in mines through the multi-stakeholder validation process, which assesses mining sites for the presence of child labor.	2012 – 2014
	Provide funds for the implementation of local and national plans to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2014
	Ensure the full implementation of the action plan to end the recruitment and use of child soldiers, including at the provincial level.	2009 – 2014
Social Programs	Improve access to education by registering all children at birth, developing programs that assist internally displaced children, building additional schools, and ensuring that schools are safe.	2012 – 2014
	Conduct a stand-alone child labor survey.	2013 – 2014
	Assess the potential impact of existing social programs on addressing the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure adequate medical, psychological, economic, and other support services for children demobilizing from armed groups and integrate stigmatization, gender, and re-recruitment concerns into programs to reintegrate such children.	2009 – 2014
	Raise awareness of relevant child labor laws to increase the likelihood of compliance.	2012 – 2014
	Expand efforts to address the needs of former child soldiers, children working in artisanal mining, and children working on the streets and in other informal settings.	2009 – 2014

Congo, Republic of the

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, the Republic of the Congo made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government launched the National Action Plan to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, which aims to improve enforcement activities related to child trafficking. The Government also began implementing a social safety net program to improve access to health and education services for poor families, and assumed a greater financial responsibility for a school feeding program that targeted 215,000 children. However, children in the Republic of the Congo are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Republic of the Congo are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in the Republic of the Congo.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	27.9 (286,137)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	90.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	29.9
Primary Completion Rate (%)		73.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children’s Work Project’s analysis of statistics from Deuxième Enquête Démographique et de Santé du Congo (EDSC-II) Survey, 2011-2012.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cassava,* sugar cane,* white beans,* endives,* bananas,* and pineapples* (10)
	Catching and smoking fish* (3, 4, 11, 12)
	Raising livestock* (10)
Industry	Production of charcoal by burning wood* (10)
	Work in stone quarries, including breaking stones* (1, 3, 12)
Services	Domestic work (3, 4)
	Working in bakeries* (1, 3, 12)
	Market vending (3, 4, 12)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3-6, 13)
	Farming, including the production of cocoa, as a result of human trafficking* (1, 4, 13)
	Forced labor in domestic work, bakeries, fishing, and market vending each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1-4, 7, 13)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Many children are trafficked to the Republic of the Congo, mainly from West African countries such as Benin or the Democratic Republic of the Congo, for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(1-3, 5, 14) Fewer victims were identified during the reporting period than in the previous year, especially from Benin. However, this could be due to the efficacy of public awareness campaigns and increased training for law enforcement officials, or it could be a result of human trafficking rings developing more sophisticated methods.(13) Children are also trafficked internally from rural areas to the cities of Brazzaville and Pointe-Noire for forced labor, with the expectation that they will receive an education and care.(1, 3, 13) Additionally, information on children’s work is limited as there has never been a national child labor survey or similar research conducted in the Republic of the Congo.(15)

Although the Constitution stipulates that free and compulsory education be provided until age 16, parents may be required to pay for books, uniforms, and school fees, which may limit children’s access to education.(3, 4, 16) During the reporting period, there were reports of sexual abuse in schools.(4) Education access was also a challenge for refugees and indigenous children, who were largely excluded from accessing public education due to long distances from established schools and a lack of means to pay for school-related fees.(4, 17, 18) Discrimination, linguistic barriers, lack of birth certificates, and academic calendars that conflict with seasonal patterns of hunting and gathering also presented challenges for indigenous children’s access to school.(18)

Additionally, Mbata ya Bakolo, a law enforcement operation launched in April 2014 to deport illegal immigrants, has been criticized for its use of physical violence and creating an environment that prevents nationals from the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) living in Brazzaville from enjoying their rights, such as access to education.(19-21) Amnesty International documented allegations that police asked school personnel to refuse education to children from the DRC. Other parents from the DRC stopped sending their children to school out of fear of deportation.(19)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Republic of the Congo has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 116 of the Labor Code (24)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	16	Order 2224 of 1953; Article 68 of the Child Protection Code (6, 25)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations and/or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 68 of the Child Protection Code; Order 2224 of 1953 (6, 25)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 4 of the Labor Code; Article 68 of the Child Protection Code (24, 25)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 60 of the Child Protection Code (25)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 334 of the Penal Code; Articles 65-68 of the Child Protection Code (25, 26)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 68-70 of the Child Protection Code (25)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Legislation title unknown (15, 27)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 23 of the Constitution of 2002 (16)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 23 of the Constitution of 2002 (16)

* No conscription (15, 27, 28)

The Labor Code allows the Ministry of Education to issue waivers allowing the employment of a child under age 16 after consulting with a labor inspector and examining the type of work.(15, 24) Although ILO C. 182 requires signatory countries to periodically review and revise their list of hazardous work for children, the Republic of the Congo's list of hazardous work dates back to Order 2224 of 1953. Research did not find a publicly available version of this law.(6, 25) Additionally, Article 68 of the Child Protection Code only prohibits hazardous work for children under age 16. This means that children ages 17 to 18 may be legally employed in work that is likely to jeopardize their physical, mental, or moral health.(25)

The Government drafted a comprehensive anti-trafficking law in 2013 that is being considered by the Parliamentary Committee.(3) Article 60 of the Child Protection Code currently prohibits the recruitment, harboring, transportation, transfer, and receipt of victims of child trafficking. It also criminalizes child trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labor.(25)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security	Enforce child labor laws and monitor officially registered businesses.(3)
National Police	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, forced labor, human trafficking, and the use of children in illicit activities.(3)
Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity (MSA)	Enforce laws related to child trafficking, and identify and provide social welfare assistance victims.(3) In the case of the MSA's Departmental Directorate of Social Affairs (DDAS), lead efforts to combat human trafficking in Pointe-Noire, including trafficking in persons for the purposes of commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor.(13)
Ministry of Justice and Human Rights	Enforce criminal laws against the worst forms of child labor.(3)

Law enforcement agencies in the Republic of the Congo took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MOL) employed 12 full-time inspectors and an unknown number of part-time inspectors, a decrease from the 17 full-time and 11 part-time inspectors employed in 2013, which is insufficient to adequately enforce labor laws throughout the country.(3, 10) The inspectors did not receive any training in 2014, nor have they received any recent training specifically focused on child labor. The MOL received less funding in 2014 than in prior years, although the exact amount is not known.(3) Resources were limited and inspectors were not routinely reimbursed for travel-related expenses.(3, 29) Article 155 of the Labor Code permits unannounced visits, but inspections occurred infrequently, were typically carried out only in response to complaints, and were limited to the formal sector in urban areas—although the Labor Code extends to the informal sector.(3, 4, 24) Inspectors have the ability to assess penalties according to Article 154 of the Labor Code, but it is not known how many penalties were assessed in 2014.(3, 24) There is no official referral mechanism between labor enforcement agencies and social welfare services. The Government also did not provide any information about the number of inspections carried out or the number of violations of child labor laws.(3)

Criminal Law Enforcement

The Ministry of Social Affairs, Humanitarian Action and Solidarity (MSA), MOL, the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights, and the National Police work together to enforce criminal laws against child labor. The MSA did not provide information regarding the number of investigators or its funding in 2014, although it noted that its funding had been significantly decreased since 2013 and was insufficient to adequately address the scope of the child labor problem.(3) Local police and National Police academies provide training for officers on identifying victims and perpetrators of human trafficking, as well as the arrest and prosecution of violators, using a procedures manual created by the MSA and UNICEF in 2011. In November, UNODC provided training to more than three dozen law enforcement, judicial personnel, and government officials on the draft anti-trafficking law.(13) However, the MOL noted that additional training is needed, since a limited understanding of the Child Protection Code among criminal law enforcement officials and judges continues to hinder enforcement.(1, 13)

There were no prosecutions during the reporting period, although investigators conducted at least four investigations related to child trafficking.(3, 10, 13) The MSA reported that five children had been rescued from child trafficking in 2014, at least three of whom had been repatriated or reunited with their families.(13) There were 10 cases pending against child traffickers in early 2014, but they were all released without prosecution and there were no convictions during the reporting period.(3) It is difficult to prosecute offenders because the high court that hears all child trafficking cases did not meet regularly during the reporting period. Thus, penalties for violating child labor laws may not serve as a sufficient deterrent to child labor.(1, 3) Moreover, falling oil prices have decreased the Government’s budget, which depends greatly on oil revenue; so budgets for ministries responsible for child labor issues were diminished in 2014.(3, 13)

Although there was no formal referral mechanism, the National Police and the MSA coordinated with local NGOs when victims of child trafficking were identified. After victims were rescued, the Magistrate of Pointe-Noire worked with the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire to assign the victim to a foster family or to a children’s shelter for care.(1, 13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a Task Force and Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role &amp; Description
MSA Task Force	Coordinate efforts to combat child trafficking, including training law enforcement, raising public awareness, and repatriating and reintegrating victims of child trafficking. Composed of the representatives of the MSA, other government agencies, the National Police, border patrol agents, and NGOs.(3, 10)
Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire	Coordinate all anti-trafficking efforts in Pointe-Noire; comprising government representatives and civil society organizations.(30) In 2014, comprised representatives from the DDAS; the Social and Cultural Advisor to the mayor of Pointe-Noire; an Imam; and a representative from a local NGO that combats human trafficking.(13)

Although the MSA continues to maintain its Task Force to combat child trafficking, it is in danger of being disbanded due to funding issues.(3) The Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire received approximately $14,000 to fund its prevention and protection efforts, which is significantly less than the $69,000 it had received in 2013.(13) Weak interministerial coordination, reduced funding, and poor recordkeeping continue to challenge the Government’s efforts to reduce child labor, including human trafficking.(10, 13) Research found no evidence of other mechanisms to coordinate the Government's efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

Research discovered that several members of the DDAS, who are members of the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire, were allegedly complicit in a child trafficking ring involving officials at the Consulate of Benin in Pointe-Noire and Government officials in Cotonou, Benin.(13) In at least four cases, DDAS officials were accused of conspiring with the Secretary General of the Consulate of Benin to place children rescued from situations of child trafficking with host families who are part of the original human trafficking network. In at least one instance, DDAS officials allegedly conspired to obtain a falsified passport from Cotonou for one of the children in order to disguise the victim as an adult and therefore deem the victim unprotected by the provisions of the Child Protection Law.(13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Republic of the Congo has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (2014 – 2017)†	Aims to establish a National Commission to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons; develop systems for monitoring and evaluation; strengthen the legal framework; and provide social services to victims of human trafficking.(31) Includes public awareness campaigns, training law enforcement officials, and improving enforcement activities related to child trafficking.(3)
National Development Plan (2012-2016)*	Develops core strategies to set national priorities for poverty reduction and attainment of the Millennium Development Goals. As part of the strategy, aims to expand employment opportunities for youth; attain universal primary education by 2015; and reduce child mortality.(32, 33)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government has adopted the National Action Plan to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of the Republic of the Congo funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Foster Families Program‡	MSA- and UNICEF-funded program that provides small stipends to foster families of child trafficking victims, with an annual budget of $100,000. Victims, regardless of national origin, are provided with medical care, shelter, and residency status while the Government tries to locate their relatives.(10, 13)
Awareness-Raising Activities‡	MSA program that provides training to community members and social workers on child trafficking issues and offers social assistance to victims of child trafficking. Also conducts anti-trafficking awareness-raising activities through television, banners, and public events.(3, 13)
Safety Net Program (LISUNGI)†‡	Government national safety net program that, in partnership with the World Bank, provides poor families with improved access to health and education services.(3) Includes a pilot cash transfer program to cover 5,000 households and an evaluation system to measure the change in situation for beneficiaries.(34, 35) Will receive a $15 million contribution from the Government.(36)
Government School Feeding Program*‡	Funded by the Government of the Republic of the Congo and the U.S. Government's McGovern-Dole International Food for Education and Child Nutrition Program, and implemented by the International Partnership for Human Development to provide school lunches and reduce poverty-related dropouts. Will receive $9 million from the Government of the Republic of the Congo between 2012 and 2014, and will target approximately 215,000 students.(3, 10)
Cost Free Identity Document Policy*‡	Government-funded program that issues free birth certificates, citizenship, and nationality documents.(13)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of the Republic of the Congo.

Although the Government has implemented programs to assist victims of child trafficking, research found no evidence that it has carried out programs to assist children engaged in forced labor in bakeries, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation. Additionally, current funding levels are not sufficient to address the scope of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Republic of the Congo; existing social programs will only be sustainable if the Government is able to maintain its funding commitments with its partners.(3, 10)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Republic of the Congo (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Make the list of hazardous work prohibited to children publicly available and ensure that all children under age 18 are prohibited from engaging in hazardous occupations or activities.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Strengthen enforcement of child labor laws by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Increasing the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce;</li> <li>■ Providing additional training on child labor issues, including the Child Protection Code;</li> <li>■ Providing adequate resources for inspectors to conduct investigations;</li> <li>■ Conducting unannounced inspections and inspections in all sectors, including in rural areas; and</li> <li>■ Ensuring that courts meet regularly and prosecute child labor law violations.</li> </ul>	2010 – 2014
	Make information publicly available about the number of investigators employed, investigations conducted, violations found, and penalties assessed.	2010 – 2014
	Establish a formal referral mechanism between labor law enforcement agencies and social welfare services.	2014
Coordination	Ensure coordinating bodies such as the MSA's Task Force and the Anti-Trafficking Coordinating Committee for Pointe-Noire have enough resources to function adequately.	2014
	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat all forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014
	Investigate allegations of government officials who are involved in a child trafficking ring with officials at the Consulate of Benin in Pointe-Noire and ensure no Republic of the Congo officials are complicit in perpetuating the worst forms of child labor.	2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Development Plan.	2009 – 2014
	Adopt a policy that addresses all relevant worst forms of child labor, such as forced labor in bakeries, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2013 – 2014
Social Programs	Conduct a national child labor survey or similar research to determine the activities carried out by working children to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure all children have access to education by ensuring that: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Education is free, by eliminating school-related expenses;</li> <li>■ All children living in the Republic of the Congo can attend school regardless of country of origin;</li> <li>■ Schools are free from sexual abuse and discrimination;</li> <li>■ All children have access to birth registrations; and</li> <li>■ Schools take linguistic barriers and cultural traditions into account.</li> </ul>	2013 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor such as forced labor in bakeries, domestic work, and commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure budgetary resources are adequate to address the scope of child labor and child trafficking in the Republic of the Congo.	2012 – 2014

In 2014, Costa Rica made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified the ILO Convention on Domestic Workers and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a Communications Procedure. The Government also increased funding for the Inspection Office and developed an inter-agency coordination manual on the protection of child and adolescent victims of human trafficking, child labor, and commercial sexual exploitation. However, children in Costa Rica are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation. Social programs do not reach all child laborers and resources for the Government's child labor law enforcement agencies remain inadequate.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Costa Rica are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation. (1-5) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Costa Rica.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	4.4 (34,494)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	4.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		95.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(6)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS 4, 2011.(7)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting bananas,* coffee,* melons,* oranges,* sugarcane,* and tomatoes* (8, 9)
	Fishing,*† activities unknown (1, 5, 8, 10)
Industry	Construction, activities unknown (1, 8, 10)
	Manufacturing, activities unknown (1)
Services	Commerce, including in stores, hotels, restaurants, and supermarkets (1, 10, 11)
	Street vending,† car washing (5, 10, 12, 13)
	Domestic service (1, 5, 10)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2-4, 8, 10, 14, 15)
	Used in the production of pornography* (3, 16)
	Work in agriculture, construction, fishing, and commerce as a result of human trafficking (4, 15)
	Used in trafficking of drugs (2, 4)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Costa Rica

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Results from the 2011 National Household Survey indicate that 61.4 percent of child labor in Costa Rica occurs in rural areas, where 9.1 percent of households are in situations of extreme poverty.(1) While evidence is limited, there are reports of indigenous migrant children, primarily from Panama, working in agriculture on the border of Panama and Costa Rica.(8) Commercial sexual exploitation of children is known to be a problem in the provinces of Guanacaste, Limón, Puntarenas, and San José, as well as in border towns and port areas.(3, 17)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Costa Rica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In 2014, Costa Rica ratified ILO Convention 189, Concerning Decent Work for Domestic Workers.(18) Costa Rica also became the tenth country to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a Communications Procedure.(19) This Protocol establishes an international system that allows children's complaints to be examined by the Committee on the Rights of the Child after exhausting national mechanisms.(20)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Articles 78 and 92 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code; Article 46 of the Labor Code (21, 22)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 87 of the Labor Code (21)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 94 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code; Article 88 of the Labor Code; Articles 5-6 of Regulation No. 36640 (21-23)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 20 and 56 of the Constitution; Article 8 of the Labor Code; Articles 7, 172, 189, and 381 of the Penal Code (21, 24, 25)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 7, 172, 381, and 383-384 of the Penal Code; Article 74 of the Trafficking in Persons Law; Article 84 of Regulation No. 36659 (25-27)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 160, 168, and 170-174 of the Penal Code (25)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 7, 160, 168, 170-174, 188-189, 381, 383-384, and 390 of the Penal Code; Article 77 of the Narcotics Law (25, 28)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A†
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A†
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	17	Articles 57 and 59 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code; Article 78 of the Constitution (5, 22, 24)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 59 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code; Article 8 of the Education Law; Article 78 of the Constitution (22, 24, 29)

† No standing military (24, 30)

While Articles 78 and 92 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code set the minimum age for employment at 15, Article 89 of the Labor Code establishes the minimum age at 12.(21, 22) The Government of Costa Rica has indicated that the Childhood and Adolescence Code takes precedence over the Labor Code as it relates to children's issues and that 15 is the minimum age enforced by labor authorities.(5, 11)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTSS)	Investigate reports of child labor, including hazardous and forced child labor, and enforce child labor laws.(2, 10) Protect adolescents' labor rights by conducting school and workplace visits, providing referrals to government services, and writing socio-labor studies and technical reports for the National Scholarship Fund (FONABE).(11, 22)
Prosecutor's Office	Enforce criminal laws protecting children, including laws prohibiting forced child labor, human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities. Employs the following investigative and prosecutorial units: the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against Trafficking in Persons, the Organized Crime Unit, the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit for Gender Issues, and the Juvenile Justice Unit.(10)
Judicial Investigative Police (OIJ)	Conduct investigations of child labor violations, child trafficking, child commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(2, 10)

Law enforcement agencies in Costa Rica took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Social Security's (MTSS) Inspection Office (DNI) employed 100 inspectors. Inspectors did not receive training on laws and enforcement of laws relating to child labor during the year.(11, 13)

The DNI operated on a budget of $12 million for the year, an increase from $8 million in 2013.(10, 13) The DNI considered funding levels sufficient but commented that additional vehicles would allow them to conduct more inspections.(13)

The law protects all minors working in any activity or sector of the economy and labor inspectors have the authority to conduct unannounced inspections in any sector, including private farms and homes.(13) In 2014, the DNI conducted 2,985 general labor inspections. The DNI mainly inspected worksites in the commercial, service, and industry sectors but also inspected agricultural, construction, and transportation worksites.(13)

The labor inspectorate is not authorized to impose fines for labor violations; labor cases are resolved in court and the power to impose sanctions is exclusively controlled by the judiciary.(13)

The DNI detected 85 child labor infractions, with 4 cases involving working children below the age of 15. All 85 children were assisted as a result of inspections, and 2 cases were ultimately referred to the judiciary for prosecution; both cases were still pending at the end of the reporting period.(13)

In 2014, the MTSS Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA) provided assistance to 300 children removed from work; this was less than half the number assisted in 2013. Of these, OATIA referred 216 to the National Scholarship Fund (FONABE) and 84 to other government agencies for assistance.(10, 13) OATIA reported that their financial and human resources were limited during the reporting period due to national budget restrictions.(13)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against sexual crimes and domestic violence, also known as the Specialized Unit for Gender Issues, assigned 36 prosecutors to investigate and prosecute sexual and domestic violence related crimes, including for minor victims. This unit received a course on investigation of online crimes related to the use of child pornography from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police but did not receive additional training related to the worst forms of child labor.(11, 13) The Judicial Investigative Police's (OIJ) section against physical integrity, human trafficking, and smuggling crimes employed 43 investigators to collaborate with the Organized Crime Unit, the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against Trafficking in Persons, and Gender Issues prosecutorial units. These investigators did not receive any training related to child labor during the year, and the OIJ indicated that the number of investigators and overall funding levels were inadequate.(11, 13) Not including salaries, the 2014 budget for the Specialized Unit for Gender Issues of the Prosecutor's Office was approximately $10,000 and $14,000 for the Victims' Attention Office.(13)

During the reporting period, the Specialized Prosecutorial Unit against sexual crimes and domestic violence reported 71 investigations related to the commercial sexual exploitation of minors and 6 prosecutions. Additionally, the OIJ reported 74 cases involving the worst forms of child labor.(13)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Office for the Eradication of Child Labor and Protection of the Adolescent Worker (OATIA)	Coordinate Government policies and programs to combat child labor from within the MTSS.(5, 31) Monitor implementation of the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in Costa Rica. Provide technical assistance to government ministries and design social programs to combat child labor. (31, 32) Oversee the Inter-Institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors to ensure children's and adolescents' rights and welfare are protected.(5, 33)
National Committee for the Elimination of Child Labor and the Protection of Adolescent Work	Develop and promote policy initiatives focused on eliminating child labor and regulating adolescent work. Overseen by the OATIA; includes a technical secretariat that is composed of representatives from various sectors.(5)
National Coalition against the Smuggling of Migrants and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT)	Promote the formulation, implementation, and assessment of national policies that address human trafficking, including labor trafficking.(26) Review the country's adherence to international standards and evaluate and award funds for programming through the National Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants Trust Fund. Help coordinate prosecutions of human trafficking and assistance to trafficking victims.(26)
National Commission to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES)	Address child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.(2, 10). Report to the National Council of Childhood and Adolescence with legal standing under the National Child Welfare Agency (PANI).(10)
National Child Welfare Agency (PANI)	Protect child and adolescent rights and receive reports of child labor.(22, 34) Activate inter-agency social services to provide child labor victims with protection and welfare assistance, including temporary shelter, legal advice, and victim counseling. Responsible for reintegrating child labor victims into the educational system.(2, 22)

In 2014, the MTSS and the National Coalition against the Smuggling of Migrants and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT) published an inter-agency coordination manual on the protection of child and adolescent victims of human trafficking, child labor, and commercial sexual exploitation. The Immigration Office (DGME), National Learning Institute (INA), and National Child Welfare Agency (PANI) published a protocol on legalizing the migration status of foreign born students under the age of 18.(13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Costa Rica has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in Costa Rica (2010-2014)	Aims to eradicate worst forms of child labor by 2015 and all forms of child labor by 2020 by eliminating poverty, improving the education system, strengthening health and legal frameworks, and conducting campaigns to raise awareness on the child labor situation. Developed by OATIA in coordination with ILO-IPEC.(35, 36) Formed part of the National Plan for Development (2010-2014).(2, 37) The Government formalized the Roadmap's Joint Programming Action Plan for 2015-2020, which is incorporated into the National Plan for Development (2015-2018).(13)

Policy	Description
National Coalition against the Smuggling of Migrants and Trafficking in Persons (CONATT) Strategic Plan (2012-2015)	Seeks to combat trafficking in persons, including for commercial sexual exploitation and labor exploitation.(10, 26)
National Commission to Combat the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (CONACOES) Strategic Plan (2011-2014)	Aims to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents.(10)
National Plan for Development (2011-2014)	Incorporates child labor issues into national education and poverty reduction strategies.(38) The 2015-2018 plan aims to decrease child labor and the worst forms of child labor.(13)
Inter-institutional Coordinating Protocol for the Protection of Working Minors	Provides services to child laborers and at-risk children through collaboration between the MTSS, PANI, Ministry of Education, and Social Welfare Institute, as well as their regional and local agencies and the private sector.(39) As part of this partnership, civil society organizations collaborate with the tourist industry to train companies on how to identify and report the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(40)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor† (2014-2020)	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and signed by Costa Rica at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(41, 42)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In August 2014, CONATT coordinated the meeting of the Regional Coalition against Human Trafficking in San Jose to develop guidelines for joint action to combat human trafficking in Central America.(43) In September 2014, Costa Rica participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. Held in Bridgetown, Barbados, these discussions promoted the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector, uphold workers' rights, and prevent and eliminate child labor.(44, 45)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Costa Rica funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Let's Get Ahead Program (Avancemos)‡ (2006-2014)	Social Welfare Institute program implemented in the local provinces that provides conditional cash transfers to low-income families to keep their children in school and out of exploitative work.(2, 10, 37, 46)
FONABE*‡	OATIA and Ministry of Education national scholarship program to encourage working adolescents to complete their schooling.(2, 37, 47, 48)
Open Classroom (Aula Abierta)*‡	Ministry of Education program that helps at-risk children and adolescents complete their primary education by providing flexible school hours and curricula appropriate for their needs. Targets those who have never been to school, those who have left school, adolescent mothers, adolescent workers, and foreign migrant youth.(49, 50)
New Opportunities (Nuevas Oportunidades)*‡	Ministry of Education program that helps adolescents between the ages of 15 and 18 who, for economic, social, familial, or work-related situations, face challenges in completing their schooling.(51)
Child Labor Awareness Campaign	MTSS and Ministry of Education public-private partnership with Telephonic Foundation (Fundación Telefónica) to raise awareness of child labor, using social media supported by Fundación Telefónica.(32)
Elimination of Child Labor and its Worst Forms and the Protection of Adolescent Workers‡ (2012-2014)	MTSS public-private partnership with the Costa Rican Electrical Institute (ICE) to combat child labor (2012-2014); ICE contributes materials for public awareness campaigns.(32)

Program	Description
EMPLEATE‡	MTSS public-private initiative that promotes access to employment for young persons between the ages of 17 and 24 who are at-risk or living in conditions of poverty.(52, 53)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011-2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including Costa Rica.(54)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012-2014)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aimed to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including Costa Rica. Included the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(54) Concluded in November of 2014.(54)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Costa Rica.

While the Government continues to support initiatives to eradicate child labor, current programming does not reach all children who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and in commercial sexual exploitation. According to OATIA, staff and funding were insufficient to expand existing social programs or conduct studies on their impact on child labor, including its worst forms.(10, 13)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Costa Rica (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Increase the minimum age provisions in the Labor Code from 12 to 15, ensuring consistency with provisions in the Childhood and Adolescence Code.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure adequate funding, human resources, and training for law enforcement agencies.	2013 - 2014
	Strengthen the labor inspectorate by permitting inspectors to determine and assess penalties for child labor violations.	2014
Social Programs	Assess the impact of the Open Classroom and New Opportunities educational programs on child labor, including its worst forms.	2013 - 2014
	Expand programs to reach more child laborers in agriculture and in commercial sexual exploitation.	2009 – 2014
	Increase the number of personnel in governmental agencies dedicated to implementing and studying the impact of programs that address the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014

Côte d'Ivoire

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Côte d'Ivoire made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government conducted a labor survey which included a subsurvey to determine the activities of working children; issued a decree to implement the Trafficking and Worst Forms of Child Labor Law that was adopted in 2010; and adopted a National Policy Document on Child Protection. The Government also established a National Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons; increased the budget of the Directorate for the Fight Against Child Labor by $800,000; continued to support social programs that address child labor in support of activities under the National Action Plan against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (NAP); and completed the pilot phase of the child labor monitoring system known as SOSTECI. However, children in Côte d'Ivoire are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in domestic work and agriculture, particularly on cocoa farms, sometimes under conditions of forced labor. Gaps remain in enforcement efforts and in children's access to education.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Côte d'Ivoire are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in domestic work and agriculture, particularly on cocoa farms, sometimes under conditions of forced labor.(1-9) According to a report by Tulane University that assessed data collected during the 2013–2014 harvest season, there were an estimated 1,203,473 child laborers ages 5 to 17 in the cocoa sector, of which 95.9 percent were engaged in hazardous work in cocoa production.(10) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Côte d'Ivoire.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	31.5 (1,682,754)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	63.5
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	21.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		61.2

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Burning† and clearing fields, cutting down trees† to expand cocoa plantations, spraying pesticides,† harvesting, drying, and fermenting cocoa beans, breaking pods, carrying heavy loads of water, and transporting cocoa pods(1, 3-10, 13, 14)
	Production of cereals,* pineapple,* bananas,* and coffee, including applying chemical fertilizers,† spraying pesticides,† cutting down trees† and burning† and clearing fields (1, 3-6, 15-17)
	Production of palm oil,* honey,† and rubber, (1, 3, 6, 16)
	Fishing activities, including deep sea diving,† repairing and hauling nets, cleaning,* salting,* drying,* descaling,* and selling* fish (16, 18)
	Livestock raising* and slaughtering,*† activities unknown (16, 18)

Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Street vending and commerce, including begging and selling pornography,*† (1, 3-5, 15, 16, 25)
	Garbage scavenging† (16, 26)
	Forced labor in mining, carpentry,* construction,* domestic work, street vending, restaurants,* and agriculture, including in the production of cocoa, coffee, pineapple,* rubber*, and cotton,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3, 4, 6, 9, 14, 18, 24)
	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3, 14, 19, 24)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers* (21, 27)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children are trafficked to, from, and within Côte d'Ivoire. Girls are internally trafficked for work in commercial sexual exploitation or domestic work, whereas boys are internally trafficked for labor in agriculture or to work in service sectors.(3, 4, 6, 16) Children from neighboring West African countries are also trafficked into Côte d'Ivoire for agricultural labor, especially in cocoa production, and for work in mining, construction, domestic work, street vending, and commercial sexual exploitation.(3, 4, 7, 9, 19, 23, 28) During the reporting period, the Government, in collaboration with the ILO, conducted a USDOL-funded study on employment, which included data on the activities carried out by children in a variety of sectors. (29, 30) This is the first study of its kind in Côte d'Ivoire that collected data on children's activities throughout the country, and it will serve as a baseline for future comparison.(29, 31, 32) The survey estimates that more than 1.4 million children are engaged in child labor in Côte d'Ivoire, with almost half working in the agricultural sector and 37.8 percent in hazardous work.(23) In 2014, there were no reports that the Government recruited or used children in its armed forces.(31, 33, 34)

According to the Law N° 95-696 on Education, education is free, although in practice there are associated fees, which make education prohibitive to many families.(1, 5, 6, 14, 35) The Government has taken measures to increase school attendance by providing school kits to primary school students, lifting restrictions related to wearing school uniforms, and introducing school canteens to provide more affordable meal options for students. However, many children in Côte d'Ivoire still do not attend school due to the cost of textbooks or other fees.(5, 36-39) Since birth registration is often required for enrollment and primary school exit exams, children without birth certificates—including those born in Côte d'Ivoire and those who have migrated to Côte d'Ivoire—may be prevented from enrolling in or graduating from primary school.(1, 18, 40-43) The lack of teachers and schools in rural areas also limits access to education.(7, 14, 18, 44-49) Research suggests some students are physically and sexually abused at school; there is limited evidence that some teachers demand sexual favors in exchange for grades, which may deter some students from attending school.(1, 50-53) Children who are not attending school may be more vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Côte d'Ivoire has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓

	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 23.8 of the Labor Code (54)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Order N° 009 MEMEASS/CAB Revised Hazardous Work List (55)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Order N° 009 MEMEASS/CAB Revised Hazardous Work List (55)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 3 of the Constitution; Article 7 of Law N° 2010-272 Prohibiting the Trafficking and Worst forms of Child Labor; Article 3 of the Labor Code (54, 56, 57)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 10-11 of Law N° 2010-272 Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor; Article 370 of the Penal Code (56, 58)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 9 and 15 of Law N° 2010-272 Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor (56)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 4 of Law N° 2010-272 Prohibition of Trafficking and the Worst Forms of Child Labor (56)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 82 of The Armed Forces Code (59)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 82 of The Armed Forces Code (59)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 2 of Law N° 95-696 on Education (35)

On May 21, 2014, the Government issued Decree N° 2014-290 to implement the Trafficking and Worst Forms of Child Labor Law that was adopted in 2010.(29, 39, 56, 60, 61) The Council of Ministers has also endorsed a draft law that criminalizes and penalizes all forms of human trafficking offenses, including adults and children.(31, 34) The Labor Code of 1995 is also being revised to include updates, including raising the minimum age of work from 14 to 16 and establishing the minimum age of apprenticeships at 14. The draft law also extends protection to children age 16 and older and requires employers to register all workers under age 18.(29, 31, 32, 34) Additionally, a draft law providing greater protection to domestic workers is under consideration. This law grants more latitude to inspectors in investigating possible labor violations in private homes.(34)

The Labor Code only applies to contractual employment. Children engaged in the informal sector or who are self-employed are not protected by provisions of the Labor Code and are thus more vulnerable to exploitative child.(5, 17) Additionally, education is not compulsory by law in Côte d'Ivoire. However, the President has proposed establishing a compulsory education age of 16 and a law on compulsory education has been drafted.(39, 62, 63)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment, Social Affairs, and Professional Training (MESAPT)	Enforce labor laws.(14) Implement the child labor monitoring system, Système d'Observation et de Suivi du Travail des Enfants en Côte d'Ivoire (SOSTECI), which enables communities to collect and analyze statistical data on the worst forms of child labor.(2, 14, 36, 64) SOSTECI concluded a 1-year pilot program in July 2014, which included data collection in 19 communities and established 115 community Child Protection Committees to enhance its efforts to monitor, report on, and coordinate services.(2, 14, 36, 64-66) In the case of the Direction of the Fight Against Child Labor, coordinate and implement measures to combat the worst forms of child labor; develop, monitor, and enforce laws related to child labor.(23)
Ministry of Interior	Enforce criminal laws against child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, forced child labor, and the use of children in illicit activities. In the case of the National Police, Decree N° 2006 11 created an anti-trafficking unit to pursue and arrest perpetrators of child trafficking.(14, 67, 68)
Ministry of Justice	Investigate and prosecute crimes related to child labor, including its worst forms.(14, 64)
National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation and Child Labor (CNS)'s Monitoring Brigades	Conduct trafficking investigations; composed of security forces tasked with dismantling trafficking networks and rescuing exploited children or victims of child trafficking.(1, 23, 67)
Ministry of Solidarity, the Family, Women and Children (MSFWC)	Provide repatriation services to victims of human trafficking, including children.(38) Chair both the Technical Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons and a coordination committee at the ministerial level which fights against all forms of human trafficking.(31, 32, 34)

Law enforcement agencies in Côte d'Ivoire took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Employment, Social Affairs, and Professional Training (MESAPT) employed 251 labor inspectors, an increase of one since 2013.(14, 29, 31) Labor inspectors are employed across the country in 15 regional offices, 10 departmental offices, and 8 units in Abidjan.(14, 29) In collaboration with UNICEF, the Government provided a 40-hour workshop on child protection, which covered child labor issues, to approximately 1,200 police and law enforcement officials.(29) Inspectors benefited from seminars and workshops on ILO conventions, national provisions, and intervention methods led by the ILO; the Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM); and the CNS.(29) The National Police's Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) indicated that training was sufficient, although it welcomes opportunities for additional training.(29) In 2014, the combined budget for MESAPT's Directorate for the Fight Against Child Labor was approximately $743,000, which included more than $353,000 from the ILO to implement SOSTECI.(31, 32) However, this amount is inadequate to fund all necessary functions.(14, 29, 64) A lack of sufficient staffing, offices, and funding, particularly the absence of vehicles and fuel, continues to hinder labor inspections.(1, 14, 15, 18, 29, 69, 70)

Article 91.5 of the Labor Code allows labor inspectors to conduct surprise inspections of any establishment at any time, but the Labor Code does not authorize inspectors to determine or assess penalties.(29, 54) Inspections target violations of general labor laws rather than of specific child labor laws, although incidences of child labor may be identified during broader labor inspections.(14, 18, 71) However, the Labor Inspectorate does not have access to a reliable list of establishments subject to inspections in industrial and commercial workplaces. Further, labor inspectors primarily focus on formal sector establishments, and enforcement in the informal sector where child labor is most prevalent was extremely limited.(29, 70, 72)

Reports also indicate that some labor inspectors ignore violations. Impunity also remains an issue, since research found that penalties are unlikely to be imposed for labor violations discovered during the inspections.(1, 18, 29, 31) Law enforcement does not have the capacity to investigate all violations due to a lack of resources and staffing.(31) MESAPT reported 861 inspections in 2014, which were conducted through site visits. All the inspections occurred in the formal sector, and no child labor violations were found.(29) Four inspections were conducted in the cocoa sector in the district of Issia as part of the Government's efforts to prohibit child labor in cocoa production. After these inspections, labor inspectors brought together 83 cocoa farmers from around the Issia Department for additional training on child labor issues.(2, 32, 60) No working children were identified during these labor inspections.(32) Research did not find any information related to the type of inspections conducted, labor violations identified, or on whether inspections were unannounced.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the National Police's AHTU employed 11 investigators to enforce laws related to child labor, including its worst forms, which the AHTU acknowledges is inadequate. Additionally, all 11 investigators are based in the capital city and lack adequate resources for transportation, so they are unable to travel throughout the country to enforce the laws.(29) UNICEF, in collaboration with the Government, developed a manual on identifying victims of child trafficking, and an accompanying 40-hour training module for security forces, which began to be implemented in 2014.(34) During the reporting period, UNICEF trained 150 local and national police, 100 judges, and 50 social workers on child protection.(73) Investigators also attended other workshops led by UNICEF and other NGOs, which provided training on human trafficking issues and the rights of children.(29) The AHTU has an annual budget of approximately $7,700 for operating expenses, which is insufficient. It received one vehicle from the First Lady's office in 2014, but it requires additional vehicles, fuel, office supplies, and furniture to carry out its duties.(14, 29, 34) In addition, the laws are not effectively enforced, particularly those governing the worst forms of child labor and trafficking, which the ILO CEACR, multiple NGOs, and international organizations also noted.(5, 14, 15)

In January 2014, the police rescued 40 girls and 9 boys, who were between ages 7 and 12, from being trafficked to work on cotton fields in the Mankono Region. The three adults accompanying the children were arrested.(14) Eight other adults were arrested for human trafficking in February, when police and forestry agents targeted cocoa fields and illegal gold mines in the Soubré Region.(74) In February 2014, law enforcement officials operating with the support of INTERPOL conducted two operations to rescue 120 victims of child trafficking.(39, 74) In total, there were 96 cases of child trafficking, 23 of which were discovered during investigations conducted by the AHTU, and 374 victims of child labor were rescued throughout the year. Of the 96 cases, 33 went to court, which resulted in 18 individuals being sentenced and 5 others either being released or out on bond.(29, 34, 39) Research was unable to find the outcome of the remaining 63 cases.(31) It is not known what penalties were assessed or if the 18 individuals who were sentenced served any time or remained in prison.(34)

The MESAPT and AHTU refer victims of the worst forms of child labor to NGOs on an as-needed basis; however, these social service providers often lack the resources to provide significant assistance.(14, 29, 34) Although SOSTECI is not a law enforcement mechanism, it works at the community level to monitor and prevent children from engaging in child labor, including its worst forms; it also refers victims to social service providers.(2, 75) SOSTECI is being developed and expanded, but it is only active in some cocoa-growing areas, and there are still insufficient means to monitor and identify child labor victims.(2, 14, 29)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation and Child Labor (CNS)	Monitor and evaluate all government anti-child trafficking and anti-child labor activities in Côte d'Ivoire, including the National Action Plan Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (NAP), make policy recommendations, and initiate awareness-raising campaigns to combat the worst forms of child labor.(38, 39) Comprising 14 international and domestic partners, including UNICEF and Save the Children and chaired by the First Lady of Côte d'Ivoire.(16, 23, 29, 38, 68) In 2014, began the second phase of its nationwide awareness campaign, which involves erecting billboards throughout the country as well as making radio announcements broadcast in French and in five different local languages.(34)
Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (CIM)	Design, coordinate, and ensure the implementation of programs to combat the worst forms of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire. Monitor and evaluate programs implemented by partner organizations related to the fight against child trafficking.(16, 39) Chaired by MESAPT and composed of representatives from 13 ministries, including the Ministries of Justice; National Education; Agriculture; Human Rights; and Youth.(23, 29, 32)
Technical Committee for the Fight against Trafficking in Persons*	Dedicated to combatting all issues related to trafficking in persons, including both adults and children.(29, 31, 34) Operate at the working level and chaired by the MSFWC.(31, 34)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

The CNS and the CIM meet regularly.(29) The committees each held their own meetings, and they also met together as part of coordinated working groups. The president of the CNS also held a meeting with coffee and cocoa producers in May 2014 to raise awareness about child labor and exchange informational.(29)

However, both the CNS and the CIM lack sufficient resources.(15, 31, 34) In addition, despite the committees' coordinated working groups, some NGOs and companies continue to indicate that they are unclear about the respective roles and responsibilities of the CIM and the CNS. This undermines effective coordination at all levels and results in disjointed or duplicated efforts.(2, 15, 34, 76, 77) The role of the newly created Technical Committee for the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons in coordinating with the CNS and the CIM is also unclear.(15, 31, 34) However, the Ministry of Planning and Development is leading a project to develop a coordinated national strategy that delegates specific responsibilities to the ministries.(77)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Côte d'Ivoire has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor (2012–2014)	Aims to prevent children from involvement in trafficking and other worst forms of child labor, provide support to victims of child trafficking, pursue the prosecution and punishment of offenders, and implement SOSTECL.(14, 16, 36, 39, 68) Received a budget of approximately $27 million over 3 years.(34)
PRSP (2012–2015)	Aims to increase access to effective education, train youth and adults with trade skills, enhance agricultural production and certified agriculture products, ensure food security, and strengthen the country's capacity to combat the worst forms of child labor.(49)
UNDAF (2009–2015)*	Aims to increase access to education, with the goal of reducing the number of children without access to primary school by half. Extended for 2 years until 2015 to fully align UN support with national priorities.(78-80)
Medium-Term Plan of Actions for Education (2012–2014)*	Aims to increase access to education, particularly in rural areas, provide high-quality universal primary school education, promote vocational education, and restore the educational system in areas most heavily affected by conflict following the 2010 election.(32, 81)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor, Especially the Worst Forms (2013-2015)	Aims to eliminate worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 through the implementation of a regional action plan with 14 other ECOWAS countries.(82) In 2014, met to discuss actions taken since Ghana's 2013 Peer Review, progress of the Regional Action Plan's implementation, and the ILO's Study on "Child Labor and Educational Marginalization in West Africa."(83, 84)
Joint Declaration Against Cross-Border Trafficking	Joint declaration against cross-border trafficking signed by the First Ladies of Côte d'Ivoire and Burkina Faso.(85, 86) The implementing decree for the Trafficking and Worst Forms of Child Labor Law was passed as part of this declaration. Additionally, the Government has established measures to systematically verify the identities of all children and accompanying adults at border crossings.(32)
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and Its Accompanying Framework of Action	Under this joint declaration, the Governments of Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, the United States, and the International Cocoa and Chocolate Industry provide resources and coordinate with key stakeholders on efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas.(87, 88) The Governments take steps to ensure that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Frameworks align with Côte d'Ivoire's national action plans in order to promote coherence and sustainability.(36, 87, 88)
Joint Declaration of Commitment to Combat Child Labor†	Joint declaration between regulatory bodies and the media to improve efforts to fight against the worst forms of child labor.(29) In 2014, conducted a capacity building workshop for 100 journalists and media professionals to raise awareness of the role of the media in combatting child labor.(32, 39) As a result of this training, educational materials on child labor issues were broadcasted at the national level.(32)
National Policy Document on Child Protection†	Led by the MSFWC; seeks to reduce the incidence of violence, abuse and the exploitation of children.(29)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The First Lady continues to lead the Government's efforts to combat child labor and child trafficking through the NAP.(34) The Government held a workshop in December 2014 to begin evaluating and renewing the NAP for 2015-2017. The renewed NAP will train teachers and school administrators on child trafficking issues; it will also place a larger emphasis on training participants to coordinate actions among other stakeholders.(34)

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Côte d'Ivoire funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Awareness Campaign Against Child Labor‡	CNS led large-scale national awareness campaign against child labor that disseminates information to increase public awareness through television and radio broadcasts, billboards, and newspapers in French and in local languages.(14, 29, 36, 39, 64, 66) Created a new strategy for 2015-2017 that calls on national actors to take on a greater role in media campaigns to raise awareness about child labor.(29)
Self-Help Village Initiative‡	Government-implemented initiative that provides villages with funds to combat child labor in the cocoa sector. Builds schools and health centers, train vulnerable households in income-generating activities, and implement a child labor monitoring system.(64, 89-91) Participating villages are provided with service packages worth approximately $60,000, which is funded by taxes and fees on cocoa exports.(14)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa by Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS (ECOWAS I) (2009-2014)	$7.95 million USDOL-funded, 5-year project implemented by the ILO with direct interventions to accelerate progress on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Nigeria. Supported Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa subregion by providing policy and capacity-building support for all ECOWAS states.(92) In Côte d'Ivoire, targeted children involved in child labor in agriculture and domestic work for withdrawal and prevention services, including by providing access to education services. By the close of the project in April 2014, had withdrawn or prevented 5,315 children from the worst forms of child labor, and provided livelihoods services to 150 adults.(65)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa by Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS (ECOWAS II) (2010-2014)	Linked to the ECOWAS I project, a $5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO with direct interventions in Benin, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Nigeria. Supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa subregion by providing policy and capacity-building support for all ECOWAS states.(66, 89) By the close of project in April 2014, had provided education services to 1,251 children, and livelihoods services to 786 households as part of SOSTECI.(66)
Towards Child Labor Free Cocoa Growing Communities in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana through an Integrated Area-Based Approach (2010-2015)	$10 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO. In support of the 2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol, goal was to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana by providing direct services to communities.(2, 75, 87) In Côte d'Ivoire, worked with the Government to develop and implement SOSTECI in cocoa-growing areas.(2, 75, 87) By the end of 2014, provided educational services to 2,500 children, and livelihood services to 1,000 families in Côte d'Ivoire.(2)
Survey on Child Labor in West African Cocoa Growing Areas	$1.9 million USDOL-funded, 3-year research project implemented by the Payson Center at Tulane University. Supports the collection of nationally representative survey data on child labor in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana to assess the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas.(91, 93-95) Coordinates with the Government and works with government statistical experts to build the country's capacity to implement future child labor surveys.(36) Collected survey data for the 2013-2014 harvest season.(10, 36, 95)
Industry-Funded projects in support of the 2010 Declaration	Aims to reduce the prevalence of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire's cocoa-growing areas, including by improving children's access to education and increasing household incomes.(87, 88, 91, 96) Funding provided by the cocoa industry in Côte d'Ivoire as follows: Nestlé, $1.5 million, and Barry Callebaut, $300,000. Global Issues Group provided $2 million for a project being implemented both in Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire.(36)
Empowering Cocoa Households with Opportunities and Education Solutions (2007-2015)*	$14.5 million World Cocoa Foundation-funded, 8-year project that strengthens cocoa-growing communities by expanding opportunities for youth through education. Focuses on youth leadership and basic education.(97-99)
Council of Coffee and Cocoa Platform Public-Private Partnership‡	Ministry of Agriculture program that aims to improve sustainable development and socioeconomic welfare of coffee and cocoa producers and their communities. Targets improved productivity and the reduction of child labor.(100)
Centers for Vulnerable Children‡	Approximately 110 MSFWC and MESAPT-funded social centers and mobile schools located throughout the country that receive women and children who are victims of crime or violence, including children who are victims of the worst forms of child labor. International NGOs also operate additional centers that provide meals and basic education.(14, 26, 29, 34)
Bas-Sassandra Program (2010-2014)*‡	UNICEF and MSFWC-funded program to protect children in the Bas-Sassandra Region from violence and abuse. In 2014, produced a manual for use in all social welfare centers throughout the country.(29)

Program	Description
Integrated Program for Sustainable School Feeding (2013–2015)*	$42.5 million WFP-funded program that aims to raise school attendance rates in rural areas, particularly among girls, through the provision of school meals, conditional cash transfers, nutritional supplements, and training for the National Directorate of School Feeding and local school feeding management committees.(101)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Côte d'Ivoire.

Although the Government of Côte d'Ivoire maintains programs and coordinates with industry, international organizations, NGOs, and other governments to help children on cocoa farms, existing programs are limited to a small number of villages due to funding constraints, and the scope of existing programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem.(10, 29, 102) Although SOSTECI concluded a pilot program in five cocoa-growing districts, it has not been expanded throughout the country because of the significant amount of resources required to implement the program.(29, 34) While the Government of Côte d'Ivoire has implemented programs in agriculture and domestic work, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the child labor problem.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Côte d'Ivoire (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Make education compulsory and establish a compulsory education age that is consistent with the minimum age for admission to work.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Allocate sufficient resources to ensure an adequate number of inspectors and investigators who can conduct effective inspections, investigations, and enforce labor and criminal laws related to child labor, particularly in sectors in which the worst forms of child labor are most prevalent.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that law enables inspectors to assess penalties for child labor violations and that penalties are enforced according to the law.	2014
	Create a reliable list of establishments that are subject to labor inspection.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Improve coordination between the National Monitoring Committee on Actions to Combat Trafficking, Exploitation and Child Labor; the Interministerial Committee on the Fight Against Trafficking, Exploitation, and Child Labor; and National Committee for the Fight against Trafficking in Persons. Clarify the roles and responsibilities of these coordinating bodies.	2012 – 2014
Government Policies	Assess the impact that existing policies may have on addressing child labor.	2013 – 2014
Social Programs	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Improve access to education by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Hiring teachers and building additional schools in rural areas;</li> <li>■ Ensuring children are registered at birth;</li> <li>■ Eliminating school-related fees; and</li> <li>■ Addressing physical and sexual abuse in schools.</li> </ul>	2011 – 2014
	Replicate and expand models, such as SOSTECI, for addressing exploitative child labor for effective implementation of the National Action Plan to combat the worst forms of child labor, including efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in agriculture and in domestic work.	2009 – 2014

Reliable statistical data on the worst forms of child labor are especially difficult to collect given the often hidden or illegal nature of the worst forms. As a result, statistics on children's work in general are reported in this chart, which may or may not include the worst forms of child labor. In 2014, Djibouti made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government drafted a National Action Plan on Human Trafficking and a Strategic Education Plan. With support from multilateral organizations, the Government continued to provide social services to children at risk of child labor, including migrants. However, children in Djibouti are engaged in child labor, including in street work and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. Significant gaps remain in the legal framework on child labor. Neither law enforcement efforts nor programs to assist working children are adequate.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Djibouti are engaged in child labor, including in street work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.<sup>(1)</sup> Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Djibouti.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	12.3 (23,693)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	67.4
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	10.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		52.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2013, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.<sup>(2)</sup>

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3, 2006.<sup>(3)</sup>

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Herding livestock (1, 4)
	Farming,* activities unknown (4)
Services	Domestic work (1, 4)
	Street work, including shining shoes, washing and guarding cars, cleaning storefronts, sorting merchandise, collecting garbage, begging, and selling items, including khat (1, 4, 5)
	Working in restaurants and small shops (1, 4)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 5, 6)
	Forced domestic work (1, 4, 5)
	Used in illicit activities, including theft* (4, 5)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In addition to Djiboutian girls, Ethiopian, Somalian and Eritrean migrant girls fall victim to forced domestic work and possibly to commercial sexual exploitation in Djibouti City; the Ethiopia-Djibouti trucking corridor; and Obock, the preferred departure point for Yemen.<sup>(5)</sup> Girls from poor Djiboutian families may be sexually exploited as a means of income.<sup>(1)</sup> Limited evidence suggests younger children are sometimes exploited in commercial sexual exploitation by older children.<sup>(5)</sup>

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Djibouti has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 5 of the Labor Code (7)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No		Article 110 of the Labor Code (7)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 396 and 404 of the Penal Code (8)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 2 and 6 of the Law on the Fight Against Human Trafficking (9)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 394, 462, and 463 of the Penal Code (8)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 461 of the Penal Code (8)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	National Army Amendment Decree (10)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 4 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (11)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Law on the Orientation of the Education System (11)

* No conscription (12)

Djiboutian law does not establish a minimum age for hazardous work.(13) The Labor Code prohibits the employment of children between 16 and 18 years old in domestic work, hotels, and bars.(7) However, this legislation is not specific enough to facilitate enforcement.

While the Penal Code contains certain prohibitions on the commercial sexual exploitation of children, the law does not prohibit possession of or benefitting from child pornography.(8)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL) Labor Inspectorate	Enforce child labor laws and regulations.(14)
Djibouti National Police and Vice Squad	Enforce criminal laws and investigate criminal offenses related to child labor, including forced child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children in illicit activities.(14)
Ministry of Justice's State Prosecutor	Prosecute child labor cases after they have been referred by the MOL.(6, 14)

Research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies in Djibouti took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) Labor Inspectorate had 23 staff members, including support personnel. There were a total of four labor inspectors, an inadequate number to cover the entire country.(14) None of the inspectors have received training specific to child labor investigations. According to the MOL, the Labor Inspectorate did not have sufficient human, capital, or material resources to conduct regular preventative inspections.(14) The Government does not have a mechanism for filing and responding to complaints about child labor. No child labor inspections occurred during the reporting period.(14)

Criminal Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, the Vice Squad included four officers, but they lacked sufficient training and resources to effectively enforce laws related to child labor, child trafficking, and commercial sexual exploitation.(14) In addition, no data were available on criminal investigations, prosecutions, or convictions for child labor-related offenses, or on implementation of penalties.(1, 14) Research did not find a system for referring exploited children to social services.(14)

The Government detained children in prostitution and street children, including potential human trafficking victims, following sweeps to clear the streets in advance of holidays or national events. After detention, immigration officials transported children identified as Ethiopian or Somali to Ali Sabieh, near the Ethiopian border, leaving them abandoned and vulnerable to re-trafficking.(5)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Council for Children (CNE)	Oversee the implementation of the National Strategic Plan for Children in Djibouti (PASNED). Members include six ministers, two representatives of the Youth Parliament, two representatives of the private sector, and two representatives of women's associations.(15)
Senior Human Trafficking Taskforce	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking. Met regularly and included the Attorney General, the Inspector General of the Judiciary, and the Ministry of Justice's Foreign Affairs Advisor.(5)

Although the National Council for Children (CNE) exists, research found no evidence that it functions as a coordinating mechanism to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Djibouti has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Djibouti

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategic Plan for Children in Djibouti (PASNED) (2011-2015)	Aims to create a protective environment for all children to ensure the protection of their human rights and equitable access to basic services. Interventions to combat the worst forms of child labor include a study on the worst forms of child labor, awareness campaigns, and social services for victims of human trafficking, sexual exploitation, and other worst forms of child labor.(13, 16)
National Strategy (2013-2017)*	Supports street children and other marginalized populations through an emphasis on protecting the rights of children and developing social programs to address the risks of children.(1, 17)
Education Sector Strategic Plan (2014-2017)*†	Incorporates strategies to address the needs of children who have not previously attended school and children living in the most impoverished areas.(17)
UNDAF (PNUAD) (2013-2017)*	Protects children against all forms of violence and exploitation and plans for boys and girls in both rural and urban areas to have equitable and quality access to basic education.(18)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In March, the Government drafted a National Action Plan on Human Trafficking, which provides for the creation of a working group to coordinate efforts on child protection, including child trafficking.(5, 17) The plan has been approved by the President and is waiting formal adoption.(19)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Djibouti participated in programs that may have an impact on child labor (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description and Objectives
UNICEF Country Program (2013-2017)*	UNICEF program in collaboration with the Government to promote access to quality education for children, especially from rural and poor urban areas, increase birth registration, and provide support for orphans and vulnerable children.(17, 20)
Humanitarian Action for Children†	UNICEF-funded program in partnership with the Government to forge stronger links between humanitarian response programs and existing long-term development programming. Includes identification of the needs and priorities of the most vulnerable populations in rural areas and suburban parts of Djibouti City.(21) UNICEF will continue to support the basic education of refugee children in camps by constructing additional classrooms, providing furniture and teaching materials to 4,000 children, and providing pedagogical training to 60 teachers. Additionally, 245 street children will benefit from a social services package.(21)
IOM Program*	IOM program in partnership with the Government to address the risks of irregular migration, including a service center along the route most often traveled by undocumented migrants from Somalia and Ethiopia on their way to Yemen.(1, 14)
School Meal Program*	World Food Programme-funded project in partnership with the Government in which 15,000 children in rural parts of Djibouti receive daily meals at school as well as take-home rations for girls to encourage them to attend regularly.(22)
Urban Poverty Reduction Program*	African Development Bank program to promote socioeconomic development in Djibouti's towns and cities, where the majority of working children live.(17, 23)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address children engaged in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, or street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Djibouti (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Establish a minimum age for hazardous work, and ensure that hazardous occupations or activities prohibited for children are specific enough to facilitate enforcement.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure children are protected from all types of commercial sexual exploitation, including by prohibiting the possession and benefit from child pornography.	2012 – 2014
Enforcement	Provide additional resources to the Labor Inspectorate and criminal law enforcement agencies so that more inspectors and officers can be hired and receive adequate training, including on identifying victims of child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking.	2011 – 2014
	Conduct inspections to enforce child labor laws.	2011 – 2014
	Publicly report on inspections, prosecutions, convictions, and implemented penalties related to the worst forms of child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Establish a referral mechanism between law enforcement and social welfare services so that exploited children, especially children in commercial sexual exploitation and street children, receive the appropriate care and reintegration services.	2014
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into existing policies.	2014
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in agriculture to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Implement programs to specifically address children involved in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and street work.	2009 – 2014

Dominica

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Dominica made a minimal advancement in efforts to prevent the worst forms of child labor. The Government continued to conduct labor inspections and support programs to reduce poverty and ensure access to education. Research found no evidence that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Dominica. However, there has not been a recent study of child labor to confirm this. National legislation does not expressly prohibit child prostitution, child pornography, or the use of children in illicit activities, including drug trafficking. In addition, the minimum age for both light work and hazardous work falls below international standards, leaving children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research did not indicate that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Dominica.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Dominica has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2).

Table 2. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	12/14/16	Articles 2–3 of the Employment of Children (Prohibition) Act; Articles 2 and 4–5 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act; Article 46 of the Education Act 1997 (2-4)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	14	Articles 2 and 4–5 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act (3)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 4–5 and 7 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act (3)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 4 of the Constitution; Article 13 of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act (5, 6)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 13 of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act (6)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 18 of the Sexual Offenses Act (7)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A†
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A†
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 2 of the Education Act 1997 (4)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 15 of the Education Act 1997 (4)

† No standing military (8)

While Article 3 of the Employment of Children (Prohibition) Act allows children ages 12 and older to be employed, Article 46 of the Education Act prohibits the employment of children ages 5 to 16 during the school year, with exceptions for students ages 14 and older working during school vacations or in school sponsored employment training programs. The three different minimum ages for work may create confusion over which protections apply to working children and may make the law difficult to enforce.(2, 4) Although the Government of Dominica indicated that it would raise the statutory minimum age for employment to 15 when it ratified ILO C. 138, it has not done so.(9, 10)

Article 3 of the Employment of Children (Prohibition) Act allows children under age 12 to be employed in light domestic and agricultural work by their parents, but the law does not define specific activities and conditions permissible for such work or meet international standards on the minimum age for light work.(2, 9) Articles 4 and 5 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons, and Children Act prohibit children under age 14 from working in certain industries, including mining, construction, and transportation; article 7 bars children under age 16 from working in those industries at night.(3) However, the minimum age of 14 for hazardous work does not comply with international standards and leaves children age 14 and older vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 10) Moreover, the Government of Dominica has yet to enact laws or regulations explicitly prohibiting the use of children in prostitution, pornography, or illicit activities, including drug trafficking.(11)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of National Security, Labor, and Immigration (MNSLI)	Conduct inspections and enforce laws related to child labor; authorized to conduct unannounced inspections at any location with employees and take legal action against employers violating child labor laws. Inspectors report children found in exploitative labor situations to police and social services.(12, 13)
Social Welfare Division, Ministry of Social Services, Family, and Gender Affairs	Provide social services—which may include education, housing, counseling, and financial aid— in child labor cases.(12, 14)
Ministry of Health (MOH)	Conduct inspections and enforce laws related to child labor. Report children found in exploitative labor situations to police and social services.(12, 13)
Police Force	Enforce criminal laws, including those related to child labor.(13)

In 2014, the Ministry of National Security, Labor, and Immigration (MNSLI) employed 4 labor inspectors and the Ministry of Health (MOH) employed 19 health inspectors. The MNSLI indicated that the number of inspectors was adequate to enforce child labor laws.(12) The MNSLI inspectors did not receive child labor-specific training during the reporting period, but the Government continued to sponsor workshops and conferences related to child protection. The funding level for the MNSLI labor inspectorate was not publicly available; however, the MNSLI believes that the allocation for labor inspections is insufficient.(12)

Dominica

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The MNSLI conducted onsite labor inspections and reviewed records for legal compliance during the reporting period; however, the total number of labor inspections the MNSLI and the MOH conducted in 2014 was not publicly available. The MNSLI labor inspections did not specifically target child labor and no child labor cases were filed during the reporting period.(12)

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for criminal law enforcement actions to address child labor, including its worst forms.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government has a policy that may contribute to the prevention of child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Third Mid-Term Growth and Social Protection Strategy (2012–2014)	Includes goal of overall poverty reduction.(1, 13, 15)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, there is no current research on whether the worst forms of child labor exists in Dominica.(1, 12) In 2014, the Government of Dominica funded and participated in programs that may have an impact on child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Basic Needs Trust Fund	Caribbean Development Bank-implemented program to reduce poverty through livelihood services, improved infrastructure, capacity building projects, and technical services.(1, 16)
Dominica Social Investment Fund	Program funded by the European Union that includes the goal of poverty reduction through training and projects for future income generation.(1, 17)
Education Trust Fund‡	Government program that provides financial assistance to students in secondary school who would otherwise not be able to complete their education.(13)
School Textbook Provision Scheme‡	Government program that subsidizes the cost of textbooks for primary and secondary school students.(13)
School Feeding Program‡	Government program that provides lunch to primary school students in targeted areas.(13)
Shelter for Abused and Neglected Children‡	Government shelter that may accept children who are victims of the worst forms of child labor.(12)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Dominica.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, the following actions would advance the continued prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Dominica (Table 6).

Table 6. Suggested Government Actions to Prevent Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Harmonize all laws governing the minimum age for work to set the statutory minimum age for employment to at least 15.	2009 – 2014
	Define the activities and conditions permissible for light work and ensure only children ages 13 and older are employed in light work.	2014
	Raise the minimum age for hazardous work to 18 to comply with international standards.	2009 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Enact legislation to expressly prohibit child prostitution, as well as the use, procuring, or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure that laws protect children from engaging in illicit activities such as drug trafficking.	2014
Enforcement	Make information regarding the annual funding levels and the total annual number of labor inspections for the MNSLI and the MOH publicly available.	2014
	Ensure the MNSLI and the MOH allocate sufficient funding for labor inspections.	2014
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine whether any of the worst forms of child labor exist in Dominica.	2014

Dominican Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, the Dominican Republic made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Despite new initiatives to address child labor, the Dominican Republic is receiving this assessment because certain children remain at increased vulnerability to labor exploitation due to limitations on educational opportunities related to the interpretation and implementation of Dominican law and policies on the right to education.

During the reporting period, the Government passed a new Penal Code that increases penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of children and ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict. In addition, the Government signed the Protocol for the Protection of Children's and Adolescents' Rights in Child Labor, which aims to eliminate child labor and increase school attendance. The Government also expanded educational programs and signed the Education Pact, a plan to reform the education system by improving teacher training, building more schools, and increasing attendance. However, children in the Dominican Republic are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Due to misinterpretations and misapplications of Dominican law and policies on the right to education, school officials do not permit some children, particularly those of Haitian descent, to enroll in primary and secondary education without birth certificates or other identifying documentation. These incorrectly-applied provisions prevent or discourage children not entitled to Dominican documents, or unable to obtain documents from their countries of nationality, from enrolling in or completing school. In addition, difficulties in the implementation of a naturalization law passed in May 2014 have hindered the acquisition of both Haitian and Dominican identity documents under that law, adding to difficulties labor inspectors and employers have in verifying affected children's ages for work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in the Dominican Republic are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-4) The 2009–2010 National Multipurpose Household Survey, published in 2011, found that although the overall prevalence of child labor has decreased in the last decade, the prevalence of child labor in agriculture has increased.(5, 6) In 2014, the Government, with partial funding from UNICEF, collected data for a new National Multipurpose Household Survey that will generate updated information about child labor. The Government has indicated that it will publish the results of the Survey in 2015.(4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in the Dominican Republic.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	10-14 yrs.	5.3 (54,850)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	96.1

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children’s work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children’s Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting sugarcane,† collecting cut cane,† planting sugarcane,† and clearing land for sugarcane production (2, 3, 9-14)
	Producing coffee, rice, tomatoes, beans,* corn,* garlic,* onions,* and potatoes* (4, 6, 15-18)
Industry	Producing baked goods (bread, cakes, and pastries) (5)
	Mining† for larimar* (a blue stone often used for jewelry) (5, 19)
	Construction,† activities unknown (5, 20)
Services	Street vending,† shining shoes, and washing car windows (4, 9, 17)
	Working in restaurants, bars,† cantinas,† and coffee shops (5)
	Working in woodworking shops* and auto repair shops* (4)
	Scavenging in landfills (4, 21, 22)
	Domestic service in third-party homes (5, 9, 17, 23)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Forced domestic service sometimes as a result of human trafficking (17, 24)
	Forced labor in agriculture and begging each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 17, 24-27)
	Forced labor in waste picking,* shining shoes,* and washing car windows* (4)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 4, 13, 17, 28, 29)
	Use of children in illicit activities, including illegal sales at border areas and drug trafficking sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 4, 30, 31)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the Dominican Republic are exploited in commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in touristic locations and major urban areas.(17, 24, 27, 32) There are also incidences of children being trafficked within the country, as well as from Haiti, for commercial sexual exploitation.(24, 32) Although evidence is limited, some reports indicate that children have been forced to engage in waste picking, shining shoes, and washing car windows, where they are sometimes forced to meet earnings quotas. Reports also indicate that children involved in these activities have turned to commercial sexual exploitation to satisfy these quotas when they are unable to meet them.(4, 33)

Haitian migration to the Dominican Republic is a longstanding phenomenon. Although estimates vary, approximately 900,000 to 1.2 million Haitians and Dominicans of Haitian descent live in the Dominican Republic.(20, 24, 34-36) Many Haitians and Dominicans of Haitian descent, including children, live in communities known as bateyes that traditionally have housed sugarcane workers and often lack adequate housing, medical services, and other basic services.(3, 17, 19, 34, 37) Some children work in sugarcane production, often alongside their parents.(2, 3, 9-14) The porous border between Haiti and the Dominican Republic has enabled children, accompanied or not, to be trafficked into the Dominican Republic without coming to the attention of authorities.(24, 38, 39) Some Haitian children who are trafficked to the Dominican Republic are forced to work in agriculture, domestic service, or begging.(24-26, 40)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Dominican Republic has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

In October 2014, the Government of the Dominican Republic ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict.(41)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 245 of the Labor Code; Article 40 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (42, 43)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Resolution on Hazardous Work for Persons under Age 18; Article 251 of the Labor Code (42, 44)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 1-3 of the Resolution on Hazardous Work for Persons under Age 18 (44)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 1, 3, and 7 of the Law Against Trafficking in Persons and Migrant Smuggling; Articles 40-41 of the Constitution (45, 46)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 1, 2, 3, and 7 of the Law Against Trafficking in Persons and Migrant Smuggling; Articles 25 and 409 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents; Article 41 of the Constitution (43, 45, 46)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 25 and 409-411 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents; Articles 192-195 of the Penal Code; Article 24 of the Law on Technological Crime (43, 47, 48)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 85 of the Law on Drugs and Controlled Substances (49)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*		Articles 96-97 and 231-232 of the Organic Armed Forces Law; Article 75 of the Constitution (46, 50)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18†	Articles 96-97 of the Organic Armed Forces Law (50)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	18	Article 63 of the Constitution; Articles 33, 35, 37, and 40 of the Organic Law of Education; Articles 45-46 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (43, 46, 51)
Free Public Education	Yes	18	Article 63 of the Constitution; Articles 33, 35, 37, and 40 of the Organic Law of Education; Ministry of Education Circular No. 18 of 2011; Articles 45-46 of the Code for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (43, 46, 51, 52)

* Articles 96 and 231-232 of the Organic Armed Forces Law (No. 139-13) state that there is no conscription in peacetime and that compulsory military recruitment may be authorized in situations of national defense or emergency. However, it is unclear whether Dominican law establishes a minimum age for compulsory military recruitment in these situations.(50)

† The minimum age for voluntary military service is 18. However, children ages 16 to 18 may enlist with parental consent.(50)

In December 2014, the Government passed a new Penal Code that, among other provisions, increases penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of children to 10 to 20 years of imprisonment, and in aggravated circumstances to 20 to 30 years of imprisonment. The new Penal Code will enter into force one year following its publication in the National Gazette.(4, 48)

Article 2 of the Resolution on Hazardous Work for Persons under Age 18 specifies activities that the Government deems hazardous to children and prohibits them for children under age 18. Article 3 of the same Resolution allows children ages 16 to 18 to engage in some of these activities, for example in the use of industrial machines, as part of vocational training programs, and only when they are properly trained, supervised, and protected.(44) Despite these protections, Article 251 of the Labor Code sets the general minimum age for hazardous work at 16.(42) The ILO has called upon the Government to amend the Labor Code to ensure that children ages 16 to 18 who are permitted to engage in hazardous activities in exceptional cases are fully protected.(53)

Children of parents with irregular migration status are particularly vulnerable to labor exploitation due to a lack of identity documents.(17, 54, 55) Article 18 of the 2010 Constitution stipulates that children born in the Dominican Republic are entitled to Dominican citizenship if one of their parents is a Dominican citizen. Children born in the Dominican Republic to parents who are both foreign diplomats, “in transit” persons, or who are in the country illegally are not entitled to Dominican citizenship.(46) The 2010 Constitution relies on the definition of “in transit” persons established in Article 36 of the 2004 General Law on Migration, which was upheld by the Supreme Court of Justice in 2005. In Article 36 of the 2004 General Law on Migration, “in transit” persons are those who are “nonresidents” and include, among others, contracted foreign labor migrants.(17, 46, 56) Article 68 of the 2011 Regulations for the Application of the General Law on Migration clarified that, in addition to nonresidents, “in transit” status also applies to any foreigner who resides or has resided in Dominican territory without regular migration status.(57)

On September 23, 2013, the Dominican Constitutional Tribunal upheld the definition of “in transit” and ruled that children born in the Dominican Republic to any foreigners “in transit” (going back to 1929) are not considered Dominican nationals, impacting an estimated 200,000 individuals.(37, 58) The option of obtaining birth certificates from the countries from where their parents originated is not viable for many children born in the Dominican Republic, particularly if their parents are no longer citizens of, or have lost ties with, their countries of origin as a result of their long-established presence in the Dominican Republic or, as in the case of Haiti, the countries of origin have suffered natural disasters resulting in the destruction of birth records that would have demonstrated citizenship.(17)

In November 2013, President Danilo Medina issued a presidential decree to promulgate the National Regularization Plan for Foreigners as a mechanism to recognize, document, and regularize undocumented migrants in the Dominican Republic.(58) In May 2014, the Government passed a naturalization law (Law 169-14), which it began implementing in July 2014, to create a path to citizenship for the more than 200,000 individuals born in the Dominican Republic to “in transit” parents.(59-61) In August 2014, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR) found that Articles 6, 8, and 11 of Law 169-14 which regulate legal personhood and nationality in the Dominican Republic are incompatible with the Government’s duties under the American Convention on Human Rights; these duties include providing freedom against discrimination under the law based on race, color, or national origin, as well as the right to nationality in the state where one is born when the right to another nationality cannot be fulfilled. The IACHR has called upon the Government to take the necessary measures, both in law and in practice, to ensure that the residency status of “in transit” parents does not constitute a cause for the denial of Dominican nationality to children born in the Dominican Republic, and to develop a system to ensure that all persons born in the country are registered equally at birth.(32, 62-65)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MT)	Lead government efforts to eliminate child labor; conduct labor inspections to identify and document offenses; and direct the Child Labor Unit (UTI) to investigate and reduce child labor, in part through the National Information System for Monitoring Child Labor (INFOSITI).(4, 9, 66-68) Implement the Ministry’s Institutional Strategic Plan (2013–2016), which outlines objectives to improve the number and quality of labor inspections overall, offer better service to workers, coordinate Labor Code reform, integrate the UTI into existing enforcement efforts, and provide improved vocational training for vulnerable populations, including children.(9)

Dominican Republic

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Organization/Agency	Role
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI)	Coordinate with the MT to protect children against labor exploitation and enforce labor laws.(9, 69) Promote policies to eradicate all forms of violence against children, including child labor, as well as improve the employability of young people.(66, 70) Receive victims of child labor through 43 municipal-level offices for psychological evaluation and refer them for services.(54, 69, 70) Run regional and municipal-level workshops on preventing and addressing the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(69)
Office of the Attorney General (AG)	Prosecute crimes involving children, including violations of child labor laws. Oversees the Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking, which utilizes a team of specialized investigators to investigate the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents and other worst forms of child labor; violations may be communicated to the Specialized Prosecutor through a hotline.(4, 69)
Ministry of the Interior's National Police (PN), PN's Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Unit, and Directorate of Migration (DGM)	Enforce criminal laws, including those prohibiting and punishing the worst forms of child labor, and coordinate with the AG in the prosecution of perpetrators.(9)
Specialized Corps for Tourist Safety (CESTUR)	Prevent child sex abuse in touristic areas, rescue minors, and arrest and bring to justice child sex offenders. Overseen by the Ministry of Defense.(70) In 2014, CESTUR and UNICEF signed an accord to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the Dominican tourist industry through capacity building and training for prosecuting these crimes.(71)

The 2010 Constitution declares the eradication of child labor as a national priority.(46) National law guarantees free public education and requires that all children attend school until age 18.(46, 51) In addition, national law prohibits the exclusion of children from the educational system based on a lack of identifying documentation.(43, 52) However, in practice, some primary and secondary schools deny access to children who cannot present birth certificates or identifying documentation.(15, 34, 37, 72) This practice puts these children in precarious situations where they are more likely to work. In addition, some secondary schools may permit access without birth certificates but require such documentation for the national exams required to obtain high school diplomas.(72, 73) Without the opportunity to receive high school diplomas and, as a result, to pursue higher education and improve access to formal sector employment as adults, individuals without identity documents have less incentive to remain in school. This may increase the likelihood that they engage in child labor, including its worst forms.(17, 23, 24, 27, 36, 66, 72, 74-76) An estimated 13 percent of all children younger than age 15 have no birth documents.(17)

In addition, difficulties in the implementation of Law 169-14, including misunderstandings of information on the application process for identity documents, as well as costs associated with this process, for example to travel to government offices, have hindered the acquisition of identity documents, adding to difficulties labor inspectors and employers have in verifying affected children's ages for work.(77)

Law enforcement agencies in the Dominican Republic took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor (MT) employed 176 labor inspectors, which is 31 fewer than the 207 inspectors employed in 2013.(69) Some reports indicate that this number of inspectors is inadequate to meet the need for inspections nationwide.(4) The Government reported that, during the reporting period, all of these inspectors received training on child labor, including hazardous child labor, and that this training was administered by the MT's Child Labor Unit (UTI).(69) The Government also reported that for 2014, approximately $4.5 million was dedicated to the MT's Inspection Unit, and approximately $142,000 was dedicated to the UTI.(4, 69) According to the MT, additional funding and resources would increase the efficiency and number of inspections.(4)

In 2014, the MT conducted a total of 78,886 labor inspections to verify compliance with labor laws, including child labor laws.(78) This number of inspections is less than the approximate total of 98,000 inspections conducted in 2013.(70) In 2014, each inspector conducted an average of 448 inspections for the year, which is less than the average of 473 inspections conducted by each inspector in 2013. This is nonetheless a high number of inspections conducted by each inspector, and it is unknown whether this high number affects the quality of such inspections. Some NGOs and labor unions have reported that inspections are not always conducted immediately after a request is made and that inspection reports often contain errors and contradictions.<sup>(4)</sup> Reports also indicate that substandard labor inspection reports have hindered the ability of the Office of the Attorney General (AG) to pursue prosecutions on criminal matters involving child labor issues.<sup>(4)</sup>

The process developed by the MT for inspections to enforce labor laws includes a preliminary visit, during which inspectors inform employers of violations and establish a period for remediation, but do not issue fines. Upon expiration of the remediation period, inspectors then conduct a re-inspection to determine whether the violations have been rectified.<sup>(42, 79, 80)</sup> If violations are found during re-inspection, the MT files an infraction report with the local office of the MT, who then transfers the infraction report to the relevant local court for adjudication.<sup>(42, 79, 80)</sup> This two-tiered inspection process puts a strain on the inspectorate's limited human and financial resources and may not sufficiently deter employers from exploiting children in the workplace, particularly in remote rural areas where re-inspections are more difficult and less consistent. Furthermore, the lack of publicly available information on the results of inspections prevents a complete understanding of how effective this inspection system is in practice.

Although the 2008 General Inspection Protocol and the 2011 Inspection Protocol for Agriculture instruct inspectors to assess child labor violations by reviewing workers' identity documents and employers' records, making observations, and conducting interviews, the widespread lack of identity documents impedes both inspectors and employers from verifying the ages of workers and guaranteeing that children under age 18 are not participating in dangerous or unhealthy work.<sup>(10, 15, 36, 79, 80)</sup> The MT has indicated that improvements are needed in how inspectors conduct interviews, ask follow-up questions, and use inspection data to strengthen the inspection system.<sup>(15)</sup> Moreover, reports indicate that in some cases, Spanish-speaking inspectors working without translation assistance have been responsible for interviewing Creole-speaking workers with limited or no Spanish-language abilities, which has hindered the efficacy of those inspections.<sup>(4)</sup>

Of the 78,886 inspections conducted in 2014, 70,020 were conducted from January through November; of these, 58,535 were regular inspections, which were preventative and conducted unannounced, and 11,485 were special inspections, which were conducted in response to requests or complaints.<sup>(4, 69, 78)</sup> In 2014, the Government reported a total of 416 children were found working in violation of the law, including in agriculture, markets, auto-repair shops, and wood-working shops, with 216 of these children found working in agriculture; research could not find the breakdown of where the remaining 200 children were found working in violation of the law.<sup>(4)</sup> Research also did not find whether there were any sanctions issued or penalties assessed and collected for child labor violations during the reporting period.<sup>(4)</sup> The MT reported that the 416 children found in child labor were removed from work and returned to their homes, where a subsequent visit from the MT informed parents of the dangers of child labor.<sup>(4, 69)</sup> Research could not confirm whether the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONANI) or its municipal offices evaluated these rescued children, provided them with services, or coordinated their return to their homes.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the AG's Special Prosecutor for Migrant Smuggling and Human Trafficking employed six investigators to conduct investigations regarding the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation. Members of the National Police's (PN) Trafficking in Persons Unit also investigated the worst forms of child labor.<sup>(4)</sup> The Government reported that, overall, there were 12 investigators dedicated to investigating human trafficking.<sup>(33)</sup> The Government also reported that the AG and CONANI received training on human trafficking issues, as well as provided training on these issues to public servants, attorneys, and civil society participants.<sup>(4, 33)</sup> Reports indicate that criminal law enforcement agencies lack sufficient resources to effectively enforce laws on human trafficking.<sup>(33)</sup>

For 2014, the number of criminal investigations conducted for the worst forms of child labor, the sectors and geographical areas where the investigations occurred, and the total number of children rescued is unknown. The AG reported on 12 investigations and prosecutions involving the worst forms of child labor; the AG pursued 6 cases of forced begging as a result of human trafficking that involved 20 minors, and 6 cases of commercial sexual exploitation, which in some cases involved other crimes, that involved 15 minors.<sup>(4, 69)</sup> The AG reported 6 convictions that resulted from these 12 cases, including 1 conviction for the crime of forced begging that carried a sentence of 2 years of prison, and 3 convictions for the crime of commercial sexual exploitation that carried sentences of 3, 5, and 30 years of prison.<sup>(4, 69)</sup>

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Child trafficking victims rescued by the PN are referred to CONANI for services, including placement in NGO-run shelters.(33) The AG reported that, of the 12 cases mentioned, 5 children were placed under the care and protection of CONANI.(69)

Reports indicate that coordination between the MT and the AG has been limited and that not all criminal violations identified by the MT have been effectively investigated and prosecuted by the AG.(4, 9, 16)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN)	Develop and promote policies to combat child labor based on research, as well as coordinate child labor initiatives. Established through Decree 144-97; overseen by the MT; and is composed of Ministerial representatives, including from the UTI, labor union officials, private business leaders, and NGOs.(66, 67, 69) Coordinates efforts of the 48 Local and Municipal Committees that implement the CDN's efforts at the local level.(4, 66, 67, 69)
Inter-Institutional Commission Against Child Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation	Coordinate and implement actions to combat commercial sexual exploitation and child abuse. Led by CONANI and the MT, and includes representatives from various ministries, the National and Tourism Police, the AG, NGOs, and the Hotel and Restaurant Association, as well as representatives of UNICEF and the ILO as advisors.(4, 9, 70)
Inter-Agency Commission Against Trafficking in Persons (CITIM)	Coordinate government agencies in efforts to combat human trafficking by developing and implementing national plans to combat trafficking, collaborating with international organizations and NGOs on trafficking issues, developing training and education programs to address trafficking, examining legislative initiatives on trafficking issues, and collaborating in the production of reports on human trafficking.(33, 81) Led by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and comprises 14 government agencies, including the Ministries of Labor, Education, Public Health, and Tourism, as well as the AG and other law enforcement agencies; created through Decree No. 575-07.(33, 81)
Social Policies Coordination Cabinet (GCPS)	Coordinate all social policies and conditional cash transfer programs, such as the Progressing with Solidarity Program. Led by the Vice President.(9, 66)
Local Committees for the Protection and Restitution of Children's Rights	Ensure that children's rights are not being violated; consists of community volunteers in 10 municipalities.(70)

In 2014, the National Steering Committee to Eliminate Child Labor (CDN) met every two months to coordinate government efforts to combat child labor.(4) It has been reported that the Local and Municipal Committees of the CDN face limitations in their coordination efforts due to a lack of resources.(15, 23)

During the reporting period, the Inter-Agency Commission Against Trafficking in Persons (CITIM) developed a protocol to detect, refer, and assist child and adolescent victims of trafficking for implementation in 2015. This protocol was developed in collaboration with the IOM.(33) However, some reports indicate that the CITIM did not convene all relevant agencies during the reporting period, and that its efforts were otherwise limited.(33)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of the Dominican Republic has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Strategic Plan to Eradicate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (PEN) (2006–2016)	Identifies the roles and responsibilities of government agencies and municipal representatives in eradicating the worst forms of child labor. Prioritizes prevention, protection, assistance, and the progressive eradication of the worst forms of child labor.(4, 67, 69, 82)
Action Plan for the Eradication of Abuse and the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Boys, Girls, and Adolescents (2009–2014)	Identifies the roles and responsibilities of government agencies and municipal representatives to eradicate the commercial sexual exploitation of children, including through legislative strengthening.(9, 69)

Policy	Description
Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor in the Dominican Republic	Outlines a plan to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and all other types of child labor by 2020.(66, 83) Designates the roles of various government agencies and sets targets and indicators for each area of responsibility, specifically poverty reduction, health, education, institutional coordination, awareness raising, and information sharing. Adopted in 2010.(66, 69)
Protocol for the Protection of Children's and Adolescents' Rights in Child Labor†	Aims to eliminate child labor in favor of greater school attendance, in part through community workshops that seek to reach 300,000 children and adolescents on child protection issues. Includes a plan to evaluate the country's policy framework on the elimination of child labor as well as the country's compliance with international conventions on child labor.(4, 69)
National Action Plan Against Human Trafficking and the Smuggling of Migrants (2009–2014)	Aims to combat human trafficking and the smuggling of migrants through strategic objectives, including prevention, investigation and prosecution, and victim assistance and protection.(33, 84)
Education Pact (2014-2030)†	Seeks to reform the education system by building more and better-quality schools, improving teacher training, and increasing attendance and graduation rates through free early childhood education and enrolling more students in the Extended School Day Program.(85) Also seeks to provide support to families to keep their children out of child labor and enrolled in school. Signed in April 2014 by the President and nearly 200 academic, political, and educational organizations.(66, 76, 85)
National 10-Year Education Plan (2008–2018) (PDE)	Aims to increase access to education and improve attendance and graduation rates, in part to reduce child labor. Aims to improve both classroom space and time in school, as well as build strategies to address the needs of children who are behind in school because of work.(66, 86) Implemented by the Ministry of Education.(66)
National Development Plan 2030 (END)	Aims to reduce poverty and inequality, and includes policies and programs that encourage families to keep their children out of child labor and in school.(9, 66, 70) Includes the Quality Education for All plan that aims to provide universal education to all children through middle school, including students without identity documents and those with disabilities.(70)
National Plan on Gender Equality (2007–2017)*	Promotes occupational and educational opportunities for women and girls, seeks to remedy gender discrimination and violence, and promotes child care for working mothers so that children do not have to be in the workplace.(87)
Government Plan under President Medina (2012–2016)	Focuses on the development of 400,000 new jobs and includes the elimination of child labor, among other goals.(4, 9)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor†	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by the Dominican Republic at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(88-90)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Efforts to implement child labor elimination policies in the Dominican Republic have been slowed by an insufficient allocation of resources, including personnel.(91) In addition, reports indicate that the implementation of the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor has also been hindered by a lack of coordination among participating government agencies.(9)

Deficiencies in the national education system have also been identified as contributing to children's engagement in child labor, including its worst forms.(53, 76) The ILO has reported that the country is not likely to meet the Education for All goal of universal primary enrollment by 2015.(53) Despite this, in 2014 the Government's budget allocated 4 percent of the national GDP to primary and secondary education for the second year in a row; this is an increase from the 2.4 percent allocated in 2011.(66, 69) Plans for the increased budget include constructing 29,000 additional classrooms, extending school hours nationwide, providing school meals, improving teacher training, and raising the quality of education.(15, 23, 76, 92-96) While these plans have not yet been fully implemented, the Government reports that 10,017 new classrooms were created in 2014.(69)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of the Dominican Republic funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI)‡	Government program that promotes the well-being of families living in extreme poverty through a comprehensive approach that includes subsidies and conditional cash transfers.(66, 69, 97) Aims to increase the number of students who attend school and to reduce child labor, including by informing parents about the effects of child labor and the benefits of education.(66, 70, 98, 99) In June 2013, the ILO and the Vice President of the Dominican Republic announced a project to withdraw 38,000 of the program's beneficiaries from child labor; this action supports the 2012 letter of agreement between the Vice President and the ILO to remove 100,000 children from exploitative work over a four-year period.(100-102) In 2014, the Government implemented this project through capacity-building initiatives and designed pilot strategies for eliminating child labor in the provinces with the highest incidence. Efforts in 2014 also included analyses of its child labor interventions and awareness programs to communicate the dangers of child labor and the benefits of education to program beneficiaries.(4, 69)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2014)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in Latin America, including the Dominican Republic. Includes the objective of developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(103)
Elimination of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011–2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor in 19 countries, including the Dominican Republic.(103)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries, including the Dominican Republic, to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by The Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the national government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in the Dominican Republic and improve the evidence base on child labor through data collection and research.(104, 105)
Awareness-Raising Campaign on Child Labor†	MT and the Foundation for Peace and Democracy (FUNPADEM) public awareness-raising campaign to mobilize communities to report cases of child labor. Launched in January 2014.(70, 106)
Child Domestic Work Awareness-Raising Campaign	MT and ILO child labor eradication campaign launched in 2013 that supports reaching the goals outlined in the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016, with an emphasis on the elimination of child domestic work.(70)
Line 700 Hotline‡	Office of the First Lady's free hotline to enable citizens to report cases of child labor, in addition to child abuse.(70)
Extended School Day Program ( Jornada Escolar Extendida )‡	Ministry of Education program to extend school hours to a full day (8 a.m. to 4 p.m.) in order to improve educational achievement and reduce child labor.(9, 15, 21, 107) In 2014, the Government continued to expand the program and reached more than 1,750 schools, with approximately 720,000 students receiving instruction.(4, 108)
Spaces for Growth and Homework Rooms ( Espacios para Crecer )‡	Government after school programs that seek to prevent children from working by keeping them in a creative learning environment outside of normal classroom hours.(15, 23, 98, 109, 110)
Spaces for Hope ( Espacios de Esperanza )*‡	Government early educational centers to promote integrated attention and positive stimulation to pre-school aged children. In 2014, the Government reported operating 71 Spaces for Hope around the country.(9, 70, 111)
Literacy Campaign ( Quisqueya Aprende Contigo )*‡	Government literacy campaign instituted in 2013 to promote the importance of literacy and education among families, including youth.(9, 112, 113) In 2014, approximately 8,500 teachers were trained for literacy instruction with students ages 15 and older, and more than 52,000 people were integrated into the program.(4, 69)
Youth and Employment Project ( Proyecto de Emprendimiento Juvenil )*	Government project supported by the Government of Chile that improves the employability of disadvantaged, at-risk youth through training and internship opportunities to promote entrepreneurial and job-related skills.(70, 98, 114) In 2014, 700 youth were enrolled in the program, and the project designed a training course on self-employment for youth and trained 25 training facilitators.(115)
At-Risk Youth Initiative*	USAID-funded project to protect youth from crime and promote access to education, including through participation in afterschool programs (Spaces for Growth) and other social services.(116)
Child Care Facilities ( Estancias Infantiles )*‡	MT-supported child care facilities that provide comprehensive attention to children of adult workers who are under age 5. In 2014, the Government reported operating 115 child care facilities around the country.(70)
Presidential Microcredit Initiative*‡	Government program to provide microcredit to small businesses in the disadvantaged regions in order to increase employment and provide improved livelihoods for families.(9)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of the Dominican Republic.

A study commissioned by the IDB indicated that the Progressing with Solidarity (PROSOLI) program had increased school enrollment and attendance among beneficiaries.(98, 117) Another study indicated an increase in beneficiaries' abilities to read and write.(70) An evaluation conducted in the province of Montecristi showed a decline in child labor among program beneficiaries compared to a control group in the same province.(70) However, the PROSOLI program requires participants to present identification documents in order to access program benefits, which would limit the participation of those individuals lacking such documentation, many of whom are vulnerable to child labor.(15)

Despite the efforts described above, current programs do not appear to adequately address the extent of the worst forms of child labor in the Dominican Republic, particularly commercial sexual exploitation and harmful work in agricultural areas.(24) Furthermore, there are insufficient efforts to reduce the demand for child sex tourism. In addition, governmental assistance to trafficking victims is minimal and inadequate, with civil society organizations as the principal service providers assisting trafficking victims.(9, 24, 32, 33)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in the Dominican Republic (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure the law establishes a minimum age for compulsory military recruitment in situations of national defense or emergency.	2014
	Amend the Labor Code to raise the general minimum age for hazardous work to 18 and ensure that children ages 16 to 18 who are permitted to engage in hazardous activities are fully protected by the law.	2014
Enforcement	Correctly interpret and apply the law to allow all children without birth certificates or other identifying documentation to enroll in primary and secondary education and complete schooling.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure that all children are able to obtain identity documents to reduce their vulnerability to labor exploitation.	2014
	Strengthen the enforcement of labor provisions that establish 14 as the minimum age for legal employment, limit the workday to 6 hours for children under 16, and eliminate dangerous and unhealthy work for children under 18 by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Determining whether the inspection ratio for each labor inspector is appropriate to ensure the appropriate quality and scope of inspections, and increasing the number of inspectors where necessary;</li> <li>■ Allocating adequate resources for inspectors to conduct timely inspections;</li> <li>■ Following the MT's 2008 General Inspection Protocol and 2011 Inspection Protocol for Agriculture when conducting inspections to improve the quality of information gathering, the use of inspection data, and to enable prosecution; and</li> <li>■ Establishing a system to verify the age of young workers in order to protect children without birth certificates or other legal documentation from exploitation.</li> </ul>	2012 – 2014
	Ensure that the two-tiered inspection system does not restrict the MT's ability to enforce its laws prohibiting child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure that labor inspectors are able to communicate with Creole-speaking workers, including those who may be underage, to adequately conduct inspections for child labor violations.	2014
	Publicly report on the mechanism by which the MT refers victims of child labor, including its worst forms, to the CONANI for services, as well as on the total number of children referred.	2014
	Publish statistics on labor inspections and criminal investigations conducted, including by type and by sector, violations identified, penalties imposed and collected, and prosecutions and convictions, for child labor violations, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2014
	Increase the resources that criminal investigators and prosecutors need to effectively enforce criminal laws on child labor.	2014
	Improve coordination between the MT and the AG to ensure violations are effectively investigated and prosecuted.	2013 – 2014

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Coordination	Ensure the CDN and its Local and Municipal Committees have sufficient resources to effectively coordinate efforts to address child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure the CITIM regularly convenes all necessary agencies to effectively coordinate government efforts to address human trafficking issues.	2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Plan on Gender Equality.	2013 – 2014
	Allocate additional personnel and resources to support national plans and strategies to combat the worst forms of child labor, including the Roadmap Towards the Elimination of Child Labor.	2009 – 2014
	Address deficiencies in the educational system by meeting the Education for All goals and by continuing to increase enrollment, add classroom space, and improve teacher training.	2011 – 2014
Social Programs	Assess the impact that certain social and educational programs have on child labor.	2012 – 2014
	Eliminate the requirement that individuals present Dominican identity documents to participate in social programs intended to combat child labor, including in the PROSOLI program.	2012 – 2014
	Expand social protection programs and increase access to them by more impoverished families that rely on child labor, particularly in commercial sexual exploitation and agriculture.	2010 – 2014
	Increase awareness raising and other strategies to reduce child trafficking and the demand for child sex tourism, and increase provision of services to child trafficking victims.	2009 – 2014

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Ecuador made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government issued Official Registry No. 221, which provides that the regional Ministry of Labor offices register adolescent workers, protecting their rights and formalizing their employment. The National Police Unit for Crimes against Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN) conducted 84 operations to combat commercial sexual exploitation and rescued 56 children and adolescents. The Ministry of Tourism and DINAPEN signed an agreement to coordinate the prevention of commercial sexual exploitation of children. Ecuador also continued to participate in a number of programs targeting the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Ecuador continue to engage in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Ecuador still faces resource constraints that prevent labor inspectors from conducting inspections and enforcing child labor laws.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ecuador are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1-3) In 2013, the Government released the results of the Child Labor Survey. The survey indicates that 359,597 Ecuadorian children and adolescents work, or 8.6 percent of the population between the ages of 5 and 17. Data from this survey were not analyzed in time for inclusion in the table below.(3, 4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ecuador.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	2.7 (75,689)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	96.9
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	2.4
Primary Completion Rate (%)		110.9

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Encuesta Nacional de Empleo, Desempleo, y Subempleo, 2011.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of bananas,† palm oil,† timber,† and flowers† (2, 7-12)
	Fishing,*† activities unknown (7, 12, 13)
	Gold mining† and small-scale mining† (2, 3, 11, 13-15)
Industry	Production of bricks† (14-16)
	Construction,† including loading construction material, mixing materials to make concrete, and brickwork (3, 17, 18)
Services	Domestic work† (2, 12, 19, 20)
	Unpaid household services* (3)
	Street work, including shoe shining,† selling newspapers,† and vending*† (2, 10, 12, 13, 15, 21)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (21-24)
	Used in illicit activities, including drug trafficking* (2, 21)
	Used in armed conflict by illegal Colombian non-state armed groups,* activities unknown (18, 25)
	Used in the production of pornography* (10)
	Forced labor in domestic work, street vending, begging, and in unknown sectors each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 22, 23, 26-34)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Children in the northern border region of Ecuador face extreme poverty and are found in domestic work, street work, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation. In the past several years, the percentage of children found in the aforementioned types of work in the provinces of Sucumbíos, Orellana, and Esmeraldas has increased by approximately 10 percent.(21)

Children, mostly girls, who do household chores for more than 14 hours a week, Monday through Friday, are often the most vulnerable because they perform work activities behind closed doors.(3)

Girls from Colombia and Peru are trafficked to Ecuador for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation. Ecuadorian indigenous children are trafficked within Ecuador and to other neighboring countries for domestic work, begging, and factory and commercial work.(21, 23, 25)

Indigenous children are particularly vulnerable to involvement in child labor, as 40% of indigenous people are found in situations of extreme poverty in Ecuador; 44 percent of children in Ecuador identified as indigenous in the 2010 census.(2, 3, 35) The Child Labor Survey indicates that Cotopaxi Province, located in the central highlands, has the highest percentage of children working. In this region, the majority of children are indigenous.(36)

Reports indicate that there is a lack of access to education for certain ethnic groups and for migrant children. Indigenous children in both rural and urban areas are found to abandon school early.(24) For example, 48 percent of indigenous adolescents do not attend secondary school in rural areas, and 37 to 40 percent do not attend secondary school in urban areas.(35) In 2012, 25 percent of children ages 12 to 17 in the Los Ríos province and approximately 20 percent of children from the same age group in the provinces of Esmeraldas, Loja, and Manabí did not have access to education.(24) Government statistics also report that most children (ages 6 to 11) from all ethnic groups attribute not attending school to a lack of economic resources and the need to work.(24)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ecuador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Section 5, Article 46 of the Constitution; Title V, Chapter 1, Article 82 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code (37, 38)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Title I, Article 2 and Title V, Chapter 1, Article 87 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code (38)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Title II, Chapter 1, Article 5 and Chapter 2, Article 8 of Resolution No. 016 of 2008 (39)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 91 and 105 of the Integral Penal Code (40)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 91, 105, and 213 of the Integral Penal Code (40)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 103 of the Integral Penal Code (40)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit activities	Yes		Articles 219 and 220 of the Integral Penal Code (40)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Title III, Chapter 4, Article 57 of the Childhood and Adolescence Code (38)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Chapter 5, Article 38 of the Organic Intercultural Education Law (41)
Free Public Education	Yes		Title VI, Article 4 of the Organic Intercultural Education Law; Chapter 5, Article 28 of the Constitution (37, 41)

* No conscription (37)

In March 2014, the Government issued the Official Registry No. 221, published in April 2014. This order provides that the regional Ministry of Labor (MOL) offices register adolescent workers, protecting their rights and formalizing their employment.(12, 42) As a part of this law, adolescents, 15 years and older, can be granted work contracts. The law requires the MOL to submit monthly reports on adolescents granted work contracts to the provincial Childhood and Adolescent Councils and to the Ecuadorian Institute of Social Security.(42)

A new criminal code, the Integral Penal Code (COIP), was implemented in August 2014. The COIP further specifies what actions constitute trafficking in persons, and substantially increases penalties for trafficking crimes.(40) The COIP criminalizes the use of children and adolescents in forced labor, forced prostitution, the use or procurement or offering of a child for the production of pornography or pornographic performances, child soldiering, and forced begging. It also defines the illegal adoption of children and adolescents as human trafficking.(40, 43) The COIP increases penalties for the trafficking of migrants, raising the term for imprisonment from 10 to 13 years and for the trafficking of non-migrants from 16 to 19 years.(40, 43).

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor (MOL)	Monitor child labor, conduct labor inspections at work sites, and enforce child labor laws. Administer sanctions against companies found using child labor.(10) Has a system to collect fines.(8)
Ministry of Justice, Attorney General's Office	Enforce criminal laws against child labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and human trafficking.(25)
Ministry of Interior (MOI)	Oversee and evaluate all police actions, including those of the country's Anti-Trafficking Police Unit (ATU) and the National Police Unit for Crimes against Children and Adolescents (DINAPEN), which investigates all crimes against children, including abuse, sexual exploitation, sex tourism, smuggling, kidnapping, exploitative child labor and forced labor.(31, 43) The ATU investigates human trafficking cases, rescue victims, and arrest traffickers.(10) Police units have dedicated officers in each province, and some of the officers are dedicated to victims and witness protection.(4, 18)

Organization/Agency	Role
Office of the Prosecutor General	Conduct investigations and try cases of child sex trafficking, child forced labor, commercial sexual exploitation, and child pornography.(10)
Ministry of Education	Provide immediate educational services for victims of child labor.(44, 45)
Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion (MIES)	Provide remediation services to child laborers and their families. Has a Special Protection Subsecretary to assist children who are victims of abuse, human trafficking, exploitative child labor, and sexual exploitation of all types. Runs seven protection centers staffed by social workers, doctors, psychologists, and educators.(4)

Law enforcement agencies in Ecuador took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the MOL employed 164 people nationwide in the inspection unit, including a dedicated child labor inspector in each province. However, a source indicates that the number of inspectors per province is too low; in some cases, large jurisdictions have only five inspectors.(43) Inspectors received training on the worst forms of child labor. Reports indicate that the training is insufficient.(18, 43, 46)

In 2014, labor inspectors conducted approximately 25,745 inspections for all types of labor violations, and found that 1,496 children were engaged in child labor, compared to 1,345 children in 2013.(4, 43, 46) Comprehensive inspections with a focus on child labor were carried out.(46) Unannounced inspections were regularly performed. The Labor Code authorizes labor inspectors to conduct inspections at workplaces, including factories, workshops, and workers' homes, when they consider it appropriate or when employers or workers request an inspection.(18) In addition, under an agreement between the MOL and the Ministry of Mines and Energy, labor inspectors can enforce child labor laws in mining activities and impose sanctions for violations.(18)

MOL issued 117 penalties for infractions of child labor laws and collected $64,540 in fines.(43) The Government has a protocol in place to provide immediate access to social protection programs to working children and adolescents who are found during inspections.(47) In 2014, the Special Protection Subsecretary of the Ministry of Economic and Social Inclusion (MIES) reported assisting 32,360 children and adolescents, of whom 25 percent were found in domestic work and 23 percent were found in street work. MIES assisted 68 adolescent girl victims of commercial sexual exploitation, and 80 adolescent victims of labor exploitation.(12) The Special Protection Subsecretary provided assistance and helped return seven adolescent female victims of commercial sexual exploitation as a result of human trafficking, and five adolescent victims of labor exploitation as a result of human trafficking.(12)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the ATU had 17 agents based in Quito and focused mostly on cases involving adult victims as well as cases of migrant smuggling.(48) DINAPEN had approximately 657 agents nationwide to handle all crimes against children and 17 officers in its anti-trafficking unit.(10, 48) A source indicates that DINAPEN does not have sufficient resources to investigate trafficking cases.(48)

In 2014, DINAPEN investigated 16 cases and removed 34 children and adolescents from exploitative labor. It also conducted 84 operations to combat commercial sexual exploitation, from which officers rescued 56 children.(48) DINAPEN officers also carried out 403 operations for begging and 1,511 children were rescued. Eighty-four operations were carried out for commercial sexual exploitation and 56 children were rescued.(49) The MIES and MOL carried out 49 inspections targeting the eradication of child labor, resulting in 1,165 children being rescued.(18) During the reporting period, authorities convicted 20 traffickers, and at least four of these convictions were for labor trafficking. However, no information is available on how many of these cases included child victims or if the remaining convictions were for sex trafficking or for labor exploitation.(50) Convicted individuals received sentences of 4 to 16 years of imprisonment.(50) However, one source indicates that there are additional cases involving child victims, including one case of commercial sexual exploitation of a 14-year-old child.(48) The Office of the Prosecutor General assisted 72 victims of human trafficking crimes; however, 6 of these individuals were reported to be dependents of direct trafficking victims. Of the 72 affected individuals, 33 percent were children and adolescents, 81 percent were victims of commercial sexual exploitation, and 19 percent were victims of labor exploitation.(51) No information is available on how many children were victims of each crime.(49) The MOI coordinated the return of 15 Ecuadorian trafficking victims, including 14 minors, to the country.(25) Child trafficking victims were provided with shelter; however, no information is available on the number of children provided shelter.(43)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Interagency Steering Committee for the Elimination and Prevention of Child Labor (IAC)	Coordinate efforts to combat child labor in Ecuador under the Program to Eradicate Child Labor. Including participation of several ministries as well as provincial and municipal governments, systematically document the elimination of child labor in priority sectors and develop guidelines so that strategies can be replicated in other sectors in which children work.(43)
National Council for Intergenerational Equity	Coordinate interagency efforts to protect vulnerable populations, including children and adolescents. Replaces the Council for Children and Adolescents.(43)
Local Autonomous Governments	Participate in coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor. Mayors are accountable for ensuring that children are not found working, or they face a fine.(44)
Unified Child Labor Registration System (Surti)	Provide appropriate services to working children. Used by agencies within the IAC.(52)
Ministry of Tourism and DINAPEN*	Coordinate prevention work against the commercial sexual exploitation of minors.(53)

* Mechanism to coordinate efforts to address child labor was created during the reporting period.

In 2014, the Interagency Committee for the Elimination and Prevention of Child Labor began drafting a new manual, Path to Restitution of Rights, which will be used as a guide to improve coordination and to assist child labor cases reported at the local level.(43) MOL trained municipal governments in order to improve coordination and increase local governments' capacity to combat child labor.(43)

During the reporting period, MOI reduced its wait time for the repatriation process of minors, including victims of human trafficking, from three months to one week.(43)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ecuador has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Ecuador Without Child Labor	Seeks to increase efforts to eradicate child labor by improving data collection, strengthening labor inspections, and carrying out awareness-raising activities in 150 municipalities.(54-56) Government agencies work with the private sector and other actors to address child labor in brickmaking, fishing, street work, and markets.(47) The Government signed an agreement with the agriculture, flower, livestock, and construction sectors to coordinate actions and promote joint programs for the elimination of child labor in those sectors.(47, 57) MIES entered into 206 agreements with local governments and organizations throughout the country to help up to 41,000 children and improved protection and shelter to victims of human trafficking.(4)
National Plan for Good Living (2013-2017)	Seeks to improve living conditions for all citizens and promote social inclusion and decent work. Eradicating child labor and providing access to decent work for adolescents of legal working age are guiding policies under Objectives 2 and 9 of the plan, which was renewed to cover the period from 2013 to 2017.(58)
10-year National Plan for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (2004-2014)	Seeks to protect the rights of children and adolescents. Under Objective 18, for children between the ages of 6 and 12, the plan addresses the eradication of child labor and hazardous child labor.(59) For adolescents between the ages of 12 and 18, Objective 26 focuses on protection against commercial sexual exploitation, and Objective 27 focuses on the eradication of hazardous work and prevention of labor exploitation.(59)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014-2020)†	In October 2014, Ecuador participated in the ILO's 18th American Regional Meeting in Lima, Peru, and signed the Declaration of the Establishment of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor. The regional initiative was launched in 2013 at the Third Global Conference on Child Labor, and the declaration re-emphasizes signatories' commitments to eradicate all child labor by 2020 as well as their recognition that child labor contributes to social and economic inequality.(60-62)
Sectorial Strategy to Eradicate Child Labor (2014-2017)†	Outlines national priorities and goals for each ministry in eliminating child labor. Delegates responsibilities and budget to each ministry to achieve goals.(43)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The Government continued to work on a draft of the National Plan to Combat Human Trafficking, Sexual and Labor Exploitation, and other Forms of Exploitation. This plan will guide effort to prevent, investigate, and impose legal sanctions for human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other forms of abuse, as well as protect and restore the rights of victims of these crimes.(12)

In September 2014, Ecuador participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. Held in Bridgetown, Barbados, these discussions promoted the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector, uphold workers' rights, and prevent and eliminate child labor.(63)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Ecuador funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Grants for Human Development‡	MIES conditional cash transfer program that supplements household income. Also targets vulnerable families and conditions payments on keeping children under age 15 in school and taking them for medical checkups. (14, 64, 65) The payments assisted 1.5 million families in 2014, a small decrease from 1.95 million families in 2013.(12, 18) Working children whose families receive the grants are more likely to stay in school rather than work, particularly children ages 11 to 15.(66-68)
National Program to Combat Child Begging‡	MIES program that raises awareness about child begging in origin and receiving communities that send and receive child beggars.(32)
School Meals Program*‡	Government program that provides free meals to 1.3 million school children across the country.(8, 69)
Business Network for a Child Labor Free Ecuador‡	UN initiative that seeks to gain commitment from participating industries to promote the prevention and elimination of child labor in their supply chains. By 2014, 28 businesses had joined, up from 27 in 2013.(52, 70-72) Businesses participating in the program have three commitments: to promote zero tolerance of child labor, conduct a supply chain analysis to determine if there is child labor, and develop strategies to prevent and eradicate child labor in the supply chain.(71) Since 2013, the program has benefitted approximately 178,000 children and has expanded to six provinces in the country.(72)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012-2014)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year multi-country education and monitoring program for the eradication of child labor.(73)
Eradication of Child Labor in Latin America (Phase 4) (2011-2015)	$4.5 million Government of Spain-funded, 3-year multi-country project for the eradication of child labor. During the reporting period, the final version of SURTI was completed.(73)
Project for the Reduction of Child Labor through South-South Cooperation in Ecuador (2009-2014)	$700,000 Government of Brazil-funded, 4-year project to support exchange of good practices to combat child labor through South-South Cooperation.(73)
Support to the Partnership Program to Prevent and Eliminate Child Labor in the Americas (2009-2015)	$3.5 million Government of Brazil-funded, 4-year project to support exchange of good practices to combat child labor between Paraguay, Bolivia, Ecuador, and Timor-Leste.(73)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011-2015)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of national governments and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor and strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers in Ecuador.(74) In 2014, the Child Domestic Workers Social Services Gap Assessment study was finalized and the protective policy framework document on the elimination of child labor in domestic work and the protection of young domestic workers of legal working age was adopted.(74)
Building Effective Policies against Child Labor in Ecuador and Panama (2012-2016)	$3.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to strengthen policy and enforcement of child labor laws as well as occupational health and safety services.(75) The project also promotes lesson sharing between Panama, Ecuador, and other countries. In Ecuador, the project is piloting efforts to address the link between child labor and disabilities.(75)

Program	Description
EducaFuturo Project (2012-2016)	$6.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by Partners of the Americas to combat the worst forms of child labor among the most vulnerable populations, including Afro-descendants, migrants, and indigenous children, by providing them with educational and livelihood services in Ecuador and Panama.(76) The project also promotes lesson sharing between Panama, Ecuador, and other countries. In Ecuador, the project is piloting efforts to address the link between child labor and disabilities.(76) The project benefited 2,320 children in 2014.(77)
Projects to Combat Human Trafficking and Exploitation	National Institute of Children and Families (INFA) program to assist children who are engaged in child labor or who are victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. Works closely with law enforcement officials to protect children and provide social services at 86 INFA centers across the country.(10) Additionally, the Government of Ecuador works with several NGOs to provide services to child victims of trafficking. These services include shelter, food, job training, legal assistance, and physical and psychological medical care. (10) The Government continues to receive technical support from international organizations to combat trafficking in persons, including working with the UNODC in launching the 2014 Global Report on Trafficking in Persons.(18, 78, 79)
Prevention of Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents from Tourism‡	Ministry of Tourism program that seeks to prevent sexual exploitation by creating regulations and awareness campaigns in the tourism sector.(80)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Ecuador.

The Government has partnered with NGOs to combat child labor by raising awareness in local communities and providing educational opportunities to children, particularly from indigenous groups, who work or are at risk of working.(10, 81) Although the Government of Ecuador has implemented programs in various sectors, research found no evidence that it has carried out specific programs to assist children in domestic work and in street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ecuador (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, and ensure that inspectors receive training on the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014
	Make publicly available the number of convictions and fines issued for child trafficking and provide adequate resources to investigators of such crimes.	2014
Social Programs	Assess the impact that the School Meals Program may have on reducing child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Expand efforts to improve access to education for all children, particularly for children from different ethnic groups and migrant children.	2014
	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in unknown sectors as a result of trafficking to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Expand child labor programs that target the worst forms of child labor in domestic work and street work, and in areas with recently documented high rates of child labor, such as Cotopaxi Province.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Egypt made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified a new Constitution, which defines a child as anyone under the age of 18, guarantees children's right to public education, and prohibits children from being employed in dangerous occupations. The Government began to systematically collect data on human trafficking and introduced a compulsory training on human trafficking for new prosecutors. Additionally, the Government reactivated the National Coordinating Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor. The Government also participated in a program designed to improve school attendance. However, children in Egypt are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work. The Government did not publicly make available data on the enforcement of child labor laws, including its worst forms. In addition, programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Egypt are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and domestic work.(1-7) Data from the 2010 National Child Labor Survey indicate that 63.5 percent of all child laborers work in agriculture. Boys are three times more likely to engage in child labor.(7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Egypt.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.7 (993,417)
Attending School (%)	6-14 yrs.	88.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.3
Primary Completion Rate (%)		107.0

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2005.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of cotton (1-3)
	Caring for livestock* (10)
	Fishing,* activities unknown (10, 11)
Industry	Quarrying† limestone (1, 12)
	Making bricks* (13)
	Working in carpentry workshops* (14, 15)
Services	Construction,* activities unknown (16, 17)
	Domestic work (4-6)
	Repairing automobiles* (13)
	Street work, including selling goods, collecting garbage, and sweeping (14, 17-19)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Domestic work and agricultural labor, each as a result of human trafficking (3, 20, 21)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 20-23)
	Forced begging sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 21, 23, 24)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3 (d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The ongoing political transition in Egypt, weak economic performance, and recurring periods of violence in some parts of the country have increased children’s vulnerability to child labor, including hazardous child labor. These factors have also impeded the development of policies to address the worst forms of child labor.(1) Anecdotal reports indicate that the poor economic situation has led to an increase in the number of children working on the streets.(14, 25) Children living and working on the street are sometimes subjected to forced begging or commercial sexual exploitation. Some working children are trafficked internally, primarily in urban centers and tourist destinations.(21, 23)

Cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children have been reported in a number of governorates, including Cairo, Alexandria, and Luxor.(21) In return for payments, parents give their young daughters into “temporary marriages” to wealthy foreign men, mostly from Gulf countries.(3, 20, 21, 23, 26, 27) But anecdotal evidence shows that this practice is on the decline with the reduction in tourism.(28)

The cost of school fees, books, and uniforms are prohibitive for lower-income families, resulting in many children dropping out of school. In addition, cultural barriers may prevent some parents from sending their daughters to school.(11)

The number of Syrian refugees has increased significantly in 2014.(25) Although Syrian refugee children have access to education, approximately 8,000 of them do not attend any form of educational institution.(29) Syrian refugees cite overcrowded schools, harassment, and transportation issues as being among the primary reasons for their children not attending school.(30)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Egypt has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Article 64 of the Child Law (31)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 1 of Ministry of Manpower and Migration's (MOMM) Decree 118 (32)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 1 and 2 of MOMM Decree 118 (32)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 89 of the Constitution (36); Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law (31); Article 2 of Law on Combating Human Trafficking (33)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 89 of the Constitution (36); Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law (31); Articles 2 and 3 of Law on Combating Human Trafficking (33)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 291 of the Penal Code as amended in the Child Law (31); Articles 2 and 3 of Law on Combating Human Trafficking (33)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 2(2) of MOMM Decree 118 (32)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 1 of Law on Military and National Service (34)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	15	Ministry of Defense Guidelines on Youth Volunteers in the Armed Forces (35)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 59(1) of the Child Law (31); Articles 80 and 238 of the Constitution (36)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 54 of the Child Law (31)

The new Constitution, approved in a January 2014 referendum, expands child protections and guarantees other protections included in existing legislation. Specifically, Article 80 defines anyone under the age of 18 as a child, affording them the right to basic services, including vaccinations, healthcare, nutrition, and safe shelter.(28) Article 80 also guarantees children access to early public education and prohibits children from working in dangerous occupations. Additionally, Article 89 prohibits trafficking and forced labor.(28)

In accordance with Article 4 of the Labor Law, protections of that Law are not extended to workers in domestic work in third-party homes, including child workers. In addition, under Article 103, protections of Chapter 3 of the Labor Law, which includes a minimum age provision, do not extend to children working in agriculture.(37) Although the Child Law also includes a minimum age provision, given these exclusions in the Labor Law, it is not clear whether the minimum age protections apply to children working in agriculture and domestic work.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Manpower and Migration (MOMM)	Enforce child labor laws and regulations, including receiving child labor complaints, investigating them, and referring relevant violations to the Prosecutor General's Office.(1, 38) Inspectors conduct routine labor inspections, and when they find instances of illegal child labor, they refer the cases to the ministries of the Interior and Justice.(28)
Ministry of the Interior	Enforce laws and regulations prohibiting trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. Refer relevant cases to the National Council for Childhood and Motherhood.(1, 38)
Prosecutor General's Office, Ministry of Justice	Prosecute violation of laws related to child labor and human trafficking.(1)

Organization/Agency	Role
National Council for Childhood and Motherhood (NCCM)	Provide technical support and training for MOMM inspectors on child labor. Identify and monitor children at risk, including those vulnerable to exploitative labor.(28) Refer victims to shelters and medical, psychological, and legal services. Manage two 24-hour hotlines, which can be used to report cases of child exploitation, including child victims of human trafficking.(28) Receives the majority of complaints regarding child labor. In 2014, the NCCM began offering simultaneous counseling and legal assistance to victims of human trafficking who call the hotline.(28) The NCCM also added a Facebook chat mechanism for victim referrals, which is staffed by two full-time employees to receive referrals and direct victims to counseling centers. Additionally, it began to systematically collect data on human trafficking victims.(28)
Ministry of Local Administration and Development	Provide administrative and logistical support for the enforcement of child labor laws.(39) Administers the Child Protection Committees.(28)

Law enforcement agencies in Egypt took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Government did not provide statistics on the number of Ministry of Manpower and Migration (MOMM) labor inspectors, inspections, violations, citations and penalties, training of inspectors, sectors inspected, the quality of inspections, and whether unannounced inspections were carried out in 2014.(28)

MOMM inspectors do not initiate routine or targeted inspections based on the analysis of compliance data or patterns of complaints.(1) The Government did not make publicly available the number of complaints received by the National Council for Childhood and Motherhood's (NCCM's) hotlines regarding child exploitation.(28)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Judicial Center for Legal Studies introduced a compulsory training on human trafficking in its curriculum for newly appointed prosecutors. A total of 558 Egyptian judges and law enforcement officials received training related to human trafficking.(25) Research did not find information on the number of investigators.

Twenty-seven cases of human trafficking were investigated and 15 cases were prosecuted in 2014. No verdicts were issued in the cases and one source stated that human trafficking cases were generally settled outside the court system. Fourteen victims of human trafficking identified in 2014 were children.(25) According to government officials, a shortage of funding constrained the Government's efforts to combat human trafficking, particularly outside of Cairo and the major metropolitan areas.(25)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Coordination Committee on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Persons	Coordinate efforts to combat human trafficking, including women and children. Led by the Deputy Minister of Justice with committee members from the Ministries of Justice, Interior, the General Intelligence Service, and Councils for Human Rights, Childhood and Motherhood, and Women.(1, 40, 41)
Child Protection Committees	Coordinate child protection efforts at the local level. Organized by the Ministry of Local Administration and Development and the NCCM, chaired by the local governors in each governorate, with subcommittees at each police station.(28) Coordinate investigations, prosecutions, and counseling services to address child labor issues. These Committees were dormant in 2014.(28)
Educational Working Group	Coordinate efforts to improve access to education for Syrian refugee children. Led by the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, in cooperation with the Ministry of Education.(30)
National Coordinating Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate efforts among the Ministries of Manpower and Migration, Justice, and the Interior, and the Councils for Human Rights, Childhood, Motherhood, and Women to finalize a draft of the National Strategy to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor. Led by MOMM.(42)

In 2014, MOMM issued a decree that revived and reformed the National Coordinating Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(28)

During the reporting period, the National Coordination Committee on Preventing and Combating Trafficking in Persons collected data on human trafficking victims from the NCCM, as well as district courts, in order to centrally gather data on investigations and court proceedings related to human trafficking.(25)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Egypt has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
First National Strategy for the Elimination of Child Labor	Aims to identify vulnerable children and remove them from child labor.(38, 43)
Second National Plan of Action Against Human Trafficking	Aims to maintain referral mechanisms, the training of law enforcement officials, and the combating of trafficking of street children.(40)

In June 2014, members of the National Coordinating Committee to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labor drafted a National Strategy for the Elimination of Child Labor, which was not finalized during the reporting period.(28)

In 2014, the NCCM launched a consultation process in cooperation with the Egyptian Public Opinion Center to receive inputs and suggestions concerning the development of a national strategy for childhood and motherhood to protect basic rights of children.(44)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Egypt funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms.(Table 8)

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Socio-Economic Development and Civil Society Support Program (2014-2018)†	$75 million EU-funded, 4-year project implemented by the WFP provides food security for up to 100,000 children at risk of engaging in child labor, and financial assistance to 400,000 family members to compensate for wages that child labor would have otherwise generated, enabling children to attend school. Supports 50,000 households in income-generating activities to help keep their children in school.(45)
Combating Worst Forms of Child Labor through Education and Livelihood Interventions in Egypt (2010-2014)	$9.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the WFP that combats child labor, particularly the worst forms of child labor in agriculture in the key governorates of Sohag, Assiut, Fayoum, Minya, and Sharqiyah, through improved child labor policy and legislation and the promotion of educational opportunities for children. Targets 8,000 children for withdrawal and 8,000 children for prevention of the worst forms of child labor in agriculture. Provides 5,000 households with livelihood support.(46) From April to September 2014, provided educational services to 43 children at risk of or engaged in the worst forms of child labor, as well as economic strengthening services to 1,072 mothers.(44)
Combating Worst forms of Child Labor by Reinforcing Policy Response and Promoting Sustainable Livelihoods and Educational Opportunities in Egypt (2011-2015)	$2.07 million WFP-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that provides direct educational services and promotes sustainable livelihoods to targeted households. Supports the review and revision of legislation on child labor. Promotes the capacity of national institutions to combat child labor, and conducts research to collect reliable data on child labor through baseline surveys.(47, 48)
Shelters for Street Children‡	NCCM program that, in cooperation with NGOs, operates shelters and provides support services to street children. A center for male street children is operated by a Belgian NGO and the NCCM.(40)
Child Rights Program (2013-2017)*	UNICEF program, in cooperation with the Government, that aims to improve the quality and coverage of child protection services and programs to prevent violence against children.(49)
Awareness-Raising Campaigns‡	NCCM program that generates awareness of human trafficking and victim services among students and educators, the public, NGOs, and government officials.(25)

Program	Description
Care Centers and Shelters for Victims of Trafficking‡	Three facilities providing assistance and services to Egyptian and foreign victims of human trafficking.(25)
National School Feeding Program*‡	Improves food security by reaching 5.3 million school children with a budget of $60 million per year.(50)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Egypt.

Research found no evidence of programs to address the worst forms of child labor in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and begging, each as a result of human trafficking.(40)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Egypt (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that law's minimum age provisions apply to children working in agriculture and domestic work.	2012 – 2014
Enforcement	Make publicly available data on the number of child labor inspectors, inspections, violations, citations and penalties, training of inspectors, sectors inspected, the quality of inspections, and whether unannounced inspections were carried out, as well as information on the number of investigators in cases of the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Strengthen the inspection system by initiating routine or targeted inspections, rather than performing inspections solely based on complaints received.	2014
	Make publicly available information on the number of complaints, including the number that involved children exploited in child labor, to the NCCM's hotlines.	2013 – 2014
	Increase funding for enforcement agencies to ensure effective enforcement of laws, particularly in rural areas.	2014
Coordination	Ensure coordination of the Government's efforts to investigate, prosecute, and provide services to children engaged in child labor, for example, through the reactivation of the Child Protection Committees at the governorate level.	2014
Government Policies	Finalize and implement the National Strategy for the Elimination of Child Labor.	2010 – 2014
Social Programs	Ensure universal access to free public education, including for girls and Syrian refugee children, by addressing the cost of school fees and supplies, overcrowding, and other barriers to education.	2010 – 2014
	Assess the impact that the National School Feeding Program may have on child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Institute programs to address the worst forms of child labor in domestic work, commercial sexual exploitation, and begging, each as a result of human trafficking.	2010 – 2014

El Salvador

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, El Salvador made a significant advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government signed the Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle, a development initiative that includes among its many goals increasing educational and vocational training opportunities for youth and combatting human trafficking. The Government passed the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons that increased penalties for the trafficking of children to a minimum of 16 years in prison, and permanently established the Attorney General's anti-trafficking unit and the National Council Against Trafficking in Persons (CNCTP). The Government's National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA) provided technical assistance in developing Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights, pursuant to the Law for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (LEPINA). The Government also expanded educational programs that aim to keep children in schools and out of harmful activities by providing meals, supplies, and extracurricular activities. However, children in El Salvador are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and in illicit activities sometimes as a result of human trafficking. Law enforcement agencies continue to lack sufficient resources to enforce child labor laws, and monetary penalties for labor violations remain low.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in El Salvador are engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in agriculture and in illicit activities sometimes as a result of human trafficking. (1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in El Salvador.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	6.3 (84,927)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.2
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	6.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		101.0

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Encuesta de Hogares de Propósitos Múltiples (EHPM), 2011.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Harvesting sugarcane† and coffee† (3, 7, 8)
	Fishing,*† including harvesting shellfish† (3, 8-10)
Industry	Manufacturing fireworks† (3, 4, 8, 11)
	Construction,† activities unknown (3, 8, 12)
	Garbage scavenging† (3, 4, 8)
Services	Vending on the streets† and in markets† (3, 4, 8, 10)
	Street begging*† (8, 13)
	Domestic service† (3, 4, 8)
	Repairing motor vehicles*† (12, 13)

Sector/Industry	Activity
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 3, 8, 14)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor†	Used by gangs to perform illicit activities, including committing homicides and trafficking drugs sometimes as a result of human trafficking (2, 4, 8, 15, 16)
	Forced begging and forced domestic service (2, 3, 8, 17)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In 2014, El Salvador, like Honduras and Guatemala, was a principal source of the high numbers of unaccompanied children from Central America migrating to the United States. These children often lack economic and educational opportunities and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and the recruitment by gangs into illicit activities such as committing homicides and trafficking drugs.(18, 19) Children often emigrate to escape violence, extortion, and forced recruitment by gangs, in addition to seeking economic opportunities and family reunification. Once en route, they become vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(18, 19)

Child labor in El Salvador is predominantly male, with boys comprising more than three-fourths of child laborers ages 5 to 17.(20, 21) However, girls comprise the majority of children engaged in domestic service in third-party homes.(3) Victims of forced domestic service include migrant children from Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua.(2) In some cases, girls do not attend school because they have child care responsibilities while their mothers work.(22) There are also reports that children are recruited into gang activity or are threatened by gangs while at school, which may cause children to stop attending school.(15, 23-25) The Government has reported that approximately 50 percent of sex trafficking victims in El Salvador are girls ages 13 to 18.(26)

The Government regularly collects statistics on children’s work through its annual Multipurpose Household Survey. It reports that with regard to 2012, there has been a decrease of 11.9 percent in child labor among children ages 5 to 17.(20, 27) However, the Government does not appear to conduct research on hard-to-reach populations who are engaged in the worst forms of child labor. For example, the Government reports that children who are used in illicit activities are not covered by its Multipurpose Household Survey.(20) A third-party monitoring group has documented an overall decrease in the use of child labor in the sugarcane harvest since 2010.(7)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

El Salvador has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 114 of the Labor Code; Article 38 of the Constitution; Article 59 of the Law for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (LEPINA) (28-30)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 105 of the Labor Code; Article 38 of the Constitution; Article 2 of Agreement 241 of 2011 (28, 29, 31)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 1 of Agreement 241 of 2011 (31)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Articles 3 and 54-55 of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons; Articles 4 and 9 of the Constitution (28, 32)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 3 and 54-55 of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons; Article 56 of the LEPINA (30, 32)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 3 and 54-55 of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons; Articles 169-173 of the Penal Code; Article 55 of the LEPINA (30, 32, 33)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 3 and 54-55 of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons; Articles 214 and 345 of the Penal Code; Article 56 of the LEPINA (30, 32, 33)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 215 of the Constitution (28)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	16	Articles 2 and 6 of the Military Service Law (34)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Articles 5, 18, and 20 of the General Education Law; Article 82 of the LEPINA; Article 56 of the Constitution (28, 30, 35)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 5, 18, and 20 of the General Education Law; Article 82 of the LEPINA; Article 56 of the Constitution (28, 30, 35)

In 2014, the Government passed the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, which replaces previous legislation and increases prison sentences for convicted traffickers. The previous penalties of a minimum of 4 years and a maximum of 8 years for convictions are now 10 and 14 years, respectively.(32, 36) When the trafficking victim is a child or adolescent, these penalties are increased to 16 to 20 years, and when the convicted trafficker is the head of a gang or organized criminal group, the penalties are increased to 20 to 25 years.(32) The law also treats forced labor and the use of children in illicit activities as trafficking in persons (TIP) crimes, and expands mandated assistance to survivors of trafficking. The Law took effect on January 12, 2015.(26, 32, 36)

Article 627 of the Labor Code specifies a default fine of no more than $60 per violation of all labor laws, including child labor laws.(29) The Government is currently reviewing national legislation to ensure that monetary penalties for all labor violations are proportionate to the nature and seriousness of the offense.(37)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS)	Enforce regulations on child labor, including hazardous child labor. Inspect registered businesses for all types of labor violations, including child labor.(8, 13) Maintain a special child labor unit that trains inspectors and businesses on child labor law.(38) Refer cases of possible crimes committed against children to the Office of the Attorney General.(8)
Office of the Attorney General (AG)	Enforce criminal law related to the worst forms of child labor. Maintain a TIP Unit, made permanent by the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, that consists of 14 prosecutors who investigate human trafficking and related crimes.(8, 32) Refer exploited children to the Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA) for social services and shelter.(8)

Organization/Agency	Role
National Civilian Police (PNC)	Enforce criminal laws regarding the worst forms of child labor. Maintain a Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons that investigates cases of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking, including child trafficking.(8, 13) Maintain an emergency hotline that receives complaints about commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking.(39)
Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA)	Receive referrals from law enforcement agencies on cases of criminal exploitation of children, including forced labor, human trafficking, and the commercial sexual exploitation of children. Provide child victims with services, including shelter, medical attention, psychological help, and legal advice.(40)

Law enforcement agencies in El Salvador took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Social Welfare (MTPS) employed 114 labor inspectors, which is a significant decrease from the 203 inspectors employed in 2013. The MTPS reported that this number of inspectors was inadequate.(4) During the reporting period, MTPS inspectors and their supervisors received training from the ILO, and MTPS inspectors participated in an additional child labor training with the Sugar Association of El Salvador.(4)

In 2014, the budget for the MTPS Inspection Department was approximately $1.8 million, which was the same amount allocated in 2013.(4, 8) The MTPS acknowledged that this level of funding, and its 15 vehicles, were insufficient to fully enforce labor laws across the country. Despite these insufficiencies, the MTPS reported that it made efforts to increase efficiencies by holding preventative child labor workshops for employers in all 14 regions of the country.(4)

In El Salvador, inspectors conduct both complaint-driven and unannounced inspections.(4) It has been reported that the inspection process in El Salvador can entail multiple visits per site, and that the Ministry of Economy and the Office of the Attorney General (AG) issue penalties in a process that can take up to 6 months.(41)

In 2014, the MTPS conducted 25,538 labor inspections; of these, 1,477 were child labor-specific inspections. This was a substantial increase from the 249 child labor-specific inspections conducted in 2013.(4, 8) Research did not find information on the sectors or geographical regions in which these inspections were conducted. As a result of the inspections, the MTPS found 20 children engaged in work without prior authorization. Of that number, one child was under the minimum age for work, and two children were engaged in hazardous work.(4) Research did not find information on the activities in which these children were engaged. In December, the MTPS conducted a pilot project to increase labor inspections for child labor violations in the production and sale of fireworks, when these activities are prevalent. During this period, the MTPS reported that it removed one child from child labor.(4) In El Salvador, children removed from child labor are referred to the Salvadoran Institute for the Comprehensive Development of Children and Adolescents (ISNA) for services. In 2014, ISNA reported that it assisted 93 children who were engaged in child labor.(4) The MTPS also reported that no child labor-related penalties or citations were issued, and that no fines were collected, during the reporting period.(4)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Government reported that the National Civilian Police's (PNC) Special Unit on Trafficking in Persons employed a staff of 34 officials, including 15 investigators. Nine of these investigators received training on trafficking in persons during the reporting period.(4) The Office of the Attorney General's (AG) TIP Unit employed 14 prosecutors. The AG TIP Unit participated in 10 training courses related to child labor, exploitation, trafficking, and international organized crime.(4) The AG TIP Unit also provided TIP-focused training to officials of the PNC, ISNA, the Ministry of Justice, and municipal governments.(4) Criminal law enforcement agencies in El Salvador have reported that they lack sufficient resources to adequately investigate and prosecute crimes, including the worst forms of child labor.(4, 42)

Reports indicate that a lack of effective coordination between the PNC and the AG may hamper efforts to investigate criminal cases. In addition, reports indicate that coordination between criminal law enforcement agencies and social service agencies also needs improvement.(26) These gaps in coordination may be rectified by the complete implementation and funding of the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons which expands, strengthens, and makes permanent existing law enforcement and coordinating bodies, including the National Council Against Trafficking in Persons (CNCTP).(26) In El Salvador, a lack of evidence is one of the major obstacles to investigating cases of child pornography.(42) Evidence that could be used by investigators is limited because Internet service providers, cell phone operators, and search engines are not required to keep information for a sufficient period of time to allow its use in investigations.(43)

In 2014, the AG investigated 53 cases of human trafficking. Of these cases, it investigated 40 cases of sex trafficking of children that included 39 female victims and 3 male victims.(26) The AG also investigated 2 cases of forced child labor that involved 2 female victims.(26) The AG reported that 4 of the 53 cases went to trial, with 3 cases resulting in convictions for the sex trafficking of children. Sentences ranged from 8 to 12 years of imprisonment in addition to civil compensation.(26) These crimes were prosecuted under Section 367-B of the Salvadoran Penal Code, given that the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons did not take effect until January 12, 2015.(26)

During the reporting period, ISNA assisted 93 children who were rescued from the worst forms of child labor, including 35 children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, 17 children engaged in forced begging, and 13 children engaged in illicit activities. ISNA also referred 13 female victims of trafficking to a government shelter.(4)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CNETI)	Determine and implement government efforts to combat child labor, including the Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms. Chaired by the MTPS and includes 12 government agencies, along with representatives from labor unions, business associations, and NGOs.(3, 13, 44) Utilize a Web-based monitoring system that allows government agencies to share and analyze information on their agencies to coordinate the implementation of the Roadmap.(45-47)
National Council Against Trafficking in Persons (CNCTP)	Coordinate government efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including by implementing the National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons.(48) Headed by the Ministry of Justice and Public Security, and composed of 11 government ministries and law enforcement agencies. Made permanent by the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons, and administered by an Executive Secretariat and a Technical Committee.(1, 26, 32)
National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA)	Develop policies to protect the rights of children, including child labor policies, and implement the LEPINA and the National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (PNPNA).(30, 49, 50) Composed of Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights, ISNA, the Ministry of Public Security and Justice, the AG, the Human Rights Ombudsman, and other agencies.(13)
Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights	Implement CONNA's policies, including the PNPNA, at the departmental and municipal levels, as well as receive complaints of child rights violations at the departmental level. Composed of local elected officials, government specialists in public health and education, and members of civil society.(30, 51, 52)

In 2014, the National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labor (CNETI) met to review its members' progress in implementing the Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms.(44) Also during the reporting period, the National Council for Children and Adolescents (CONNA) continued to provide technical assistance in developing the Departmental and Local Committees for Children's and Adolescents' Rights, as mandated by the Law for the Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents (LEPINA).(51, 52) With funding from the ILO and the Salvadoran Chamber of Farming and Agro Industries (CAMAGRO), CONNA also conducted an outreach campaign on the prevention and eradication of child labor in agriculture and associated sectors that involved more than 1,000 parents, 180 youth, and 125 employers.(4) In addition, CONNA published a Public Registry of civil associations that monitor and advocate for the rights of children and adolescents for 2014. Along with ISNA, the 39 associations contained in this Public Registry comprise the Network of Shared Services.(53)

Despite these efforts, challenges remain. CONNA does not have sufficient resources to implement all of its mandates established by the LEPINA. As a result, it cannot fully implement the interagency coordination mechanisms it has developed to combat child labor and protect children's rights.(13, 54)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of El Salvador has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap to Make El Salvador a Country Free of Child Labor and its Worst Forms	Serves as the Government's main policy framework to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor by 2015, and all child labor by 2020, by reducing poverty, improving education and health, protecting children's rights, raising awareness, and generating knowledge.(1, 55)
National Policy for the Protection of Children and Adolescents (2013–2023) (PNPNA)	Sets government policies and action plans aimed at guaranteeing children's rights and protecting them from violence and harm, including the worst forms of child labor. Objectives include improving health services for children, improving access to quality education, improving services for children with disabilities, reducing poverty among children, and others.(50) Drafted and launched by CONNA after it consulted thousands of children and adults throughout El Salvador per its mandate by the LEPINA.(56)
National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons	Defines a comprehensive plan to combat human trafficking of both adults and children, including commercial sexual exploitation, labor exploitation, begging, pornography, and sex tourism. Aims to improve prevention efforts, victim assistance, prosecution, interagency coordination, training, and anti-corruption efforts.(1, 57, 58)
Inclusive Education Policy	Defines actions that the Ministry of Education (MINED) should implement to improve education for marginalized and excluded groups, including child laborers.(1, 59)
National Youth Policy (2010–2024)*	Outlines the Government's strategy to provide integrated services to socially excluded youth. Includes the goal of providing vocational training and creating 50,000 temporary jobs for youth.(60)
Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle†	Aims to create economic growth, increase educational and vocational training opportunities for youth, and reduce violence in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador, in part to reduce the number of unaccompanied minors who leave El Salvador and other Central American countries for the United States and who are vulnerable to human trafficking. Signed by the presidents of each country in 2014.(61-63)
Partnership for Growth: Joint Country Action Plan between El Salvador and the United States (2011–2015)	Aims to promote broad-based economic growth in El Salvador, with a focus on human capital development and crime prevention, including the provision of assistance to at-risk youth.(64, 65)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor (2014–2020)†	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013), and signed by El Salvador at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(66-68)
Memorandum of Understanding between El Salvador and Colombia on Preventing and Investigating Trafficking in Persons and Assisting Victims	Establishes joint actions between Salvadoran and Colombian government agencies to improve their coordination in preventing and investigating human trafficking cases, and protecting victims. Signed in 2013.(69)
Central American Regional Coalition to Combat Human Trafficking	Aims to improve government and civil society efforts to combat human trafficking in Central America. Includes the participation of civil society organizations and the national police and public prosecutor's offices in Central America, including those of the Government of Guatemala.(70-72) Includes a Memorandum of Understanding between El Salvador and Guatemala on Protecting Trafficking Victims and the Illicit Trafficking of Migrants, which establishes actions for the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador to improve the protection of trafficking victims and reduce the trafficking of migrants along the Guatemala-El Salvador border. Includes a focus on improving services for children.(70-72)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

SIGNIFICANT ADVANCEMENT

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of El Salvador funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Project to Combat Child Labor in El Salvador	$14 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to combat child labor, including by strengthening national and municipal government capacity to address child labor.(22, 73) As of October 2014, has provided educational or vocational services to 9,377 children engaged in, or at risk of engaging in child labor. In 2014, MINED implemented a teacher-training diploma program for 200 teachers in municipalities where child labor is prevalent so that they may better respond to students' educational and social needs, and to help prevent child labor.(74, 75)
Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including El Salvador, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(76)
Solidarity Communities Programs ( Comunidades Solidarias )*‡	Government programs implemented in the poorest municipalities to reduce social exclusion and boost household income by increasing access to public services and building human capital. Includes Health and Education Bonus Programs that assist more than 100,000 families with cash transfers conditioned on children's school attendance and regular health checkups.(1, 77-79) Includes the Temporary Income Support Program (PATI) that provides financial support and vocational training to beneficiaries age 16 and older and female heads of household who face poverty. PATI is financed with support from the World Bank.(1, 77-79)
School Meal and School Supply Programs*‡	MINED programs that provide low-income children with school meals and school supplies, including uniforms, to encourage school attendance.(80-82) In 2014, expanded to assist 1.4 million students with school meals.(83)
Inclusive Full-Time School Program ( Escuela Inclusiva de Tiempo Pleno )*‡	Government program that provides extracurricular programs in schools, such as art and entrepreneurship classes, to extend the school day and prevent children from becoming involved in harmful activities. Funded by the World Bank, USAID, the Millennium Challenge Corporation, and others, with the Government providing $10.2 million.(4, 84, 85) Begun in 2011; in 2014, the program expanded to incorporate 1,620 schools in 100 municipalities across the country.(4, 86)
School Prevention and Security Plan*‡	Programs implemented by MINED, the Ministry of Justice and Public Security, and the PNC in schools with high levels of violence. Includes activities such as providing psychological help, skills workshops for youth, crisis intervention, and increased police patrols.(87) In 2014, continued to operate in 345 schools.(88)
"Don't Put Your Lives at Risk" Public Awareness Campaign ( No pongas en riesgo sus vidas )†‡	CONNA campaign that sensitizes children and their families to the dangers of irregular and unaccompanied migration, including the risks of being trafficked and forced to engage in commercial sexual exploitation. Supported by UNICEF and IOM.(89)
Public Awareness Campaigns on Child Labor‡	Government public awareness campaigns implemented by MINED, the Ministry of Health, CONNA, and others to inform children about the dangers of child labor, including manufacturing and handling fireworks.(90, 91) In 2014, MINED implemented awareness efforts in 74 school districts with high levels of child labor.(4)
Research on Trafficking in Persons and Victims' Assistance Programs‡	Government program to conduct research on trafficking routes in El Salvador, and provide shelter and medical assistance to female victims of trafficking, including children.(92)
First I Learn ( Primero Aprendo en Centroamérica )	MTPS project implemented with the Ministries of Labor from Nicaragua and Guatemala that assisted 1,000 children at risk of commercial sexual exploitation in the three countries. Provided training to businesses in the tourism sector on commercial sexual exploitation and developed a manual for workers on the prevention and eradication of child labor.(4)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in the Americas, including El Salvador. A main objective of the project is to develop information systems on the worst forms of child labor.(93)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of El Salvador.

The Government implements several programs to reduce the worst forms of child labor by assisting poor families and school children; however, research found no evidence that the Government has programs that assist child laborers who may not be living with their families or attending school, such as children engaged in domestic service. In addition, although government programs have expanded basic education coverage, gang violence has hindered efforts to increase school enrollment and decrease dropout rates.(94, 95)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in El Salvador (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that monetary penalties for child labor violations are proportionate to the nature and seriousness of the offence.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure the number of labor inspectors is sufficient to fully enforce child labor laws.	2014
	Provide sufficient funding and resources to the MTPS and criminal law enforcement agencies to fully enforce child labor laws.	2010 – 2014
	Strengthen enforcement of child labor and other laws by streamlining the labor inspection process and the issuance of fines.	2009 – 2014
	Publicly report on the sectors and geographical regions in which labor inspections are conducted, on the activities in which children are engaged in child labor, and on penalties or citations issued for child labor law violations.	2014
	Implement and fund the Special Law Against Trafficking in Persons to improve coordination between the PNC and the AG in their investigation and prosecution of criminal cases, as well as their referral of cases to social service providers.	2014
	Establish a code of conduct for Internet service providers, cell phone operators, and search engines to combat child pornography by reporting cases, blocking sites, and retaining information for investigations.	2009 – 2014
Coordination	Provide sufficient funding to CONNA to fully implement the LEPINA.	2012 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the National Youth Policy for 2010–2024.	2014
Social Programs	Improve children's access to education by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Expanding childcare options for working mothers to allow girls to go to school.</li> <li>■ Ensuring that school children are safe in schools.</li> </ul>	2011 – 2014
	Conduct a study on the use of children in illicit activities.	2009 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing social programs, such as the Solidarity Communities Programs, have on addressing child labor.	2014
	Implement programs to address child labor in domestic service.	2014

In 2014, Eritrea made efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, but was also complicit in the use of forced child labor and forced military recruitment of children. While the Government ratified the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons, Eritrea is receiving this assessment of no advancement because it continued to require children to participate in a national program called Maetot, under which children in grades 9 to 11 engage in agricultural, environmental, or hygiene-related public works projects for varying amounts of time during their annual summer holidays from school. In addition, although Eritrean law prohibits the recruitment of children under age 18 into the armed forces, there may be children enrolled in the Government's compulsory military training program. Gaps in the legal framework exist, including a lack of specific penalties for employers of children in hazardous work and employers of children under the minimum age for work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Eritrea are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work.(1-4) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Eritrea. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		31.2

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(5)
Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(6)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Production of corn,* wheat,* sorghum,* and other grains* (1-4)
	Herding livestock* (1, 2)
Industry	Small-scale manufacturing* (1-3)
	Mining* (4, 7)
Services	Domestic work (1-3)
	Working in garages, bicycle repair shops, tea and coffee shops, and metal workshops (1-3)
	Street work, including selling cigarettes, newspapers, and chewing gum, cleaning cars, and transporting goods on donkey carts or tricycles*† (1-3)
	Gathering firewood and hauling water* (1, 2)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1-3, 8)
	Compulsory participation in Active National Service or the Popular Army prior to the age of 18 (1-3, 9-11)
	Forced labor sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

The Ministry of Education operates a national program called Maetot, under which children in grades 9 to 11 are required to engage in public works projects in agriculture, environmental protection, or hygiene during their summer holidays, in some cases for as long as 2 months.(1, 2, 12-14) Adolescents may be required to dig irrigation ditches or canals, maintain agricultural terracing, or produce and maintain school furniture.(1-3) Government declarations indicate that the purpose of Maetot is to instill a proper work ethic in adolescents and to expose them to persons of other ethnic backgrounds, with the aim of fostering their appreciation for diverse cultures and strengthening national unity through cooperation and self-reliance.(13)

The Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995 establishes compulsory military training and service, known as Active National Service, for all citizens between ages 18 and 40.(15) In order to graduate from high school and meet the compulsory training component of Active National Service, students are required to complete their final year of schooling (grade 12) at the Sawa Military Training Camp in remote western Eritrea; these students have typically reached age 18, but some are younger.(2, 3, 7, 8, 15, 16) For some attending Sawa, National Service may consist of 6 months of military training followed by employment in a Government work unit for 12 months. However, for others, and for those who have no opportunity to attend grade 12, the Government often fails to abide by the Proclamation’s 18-month limit on National Service.(8) Eritreans may be compelled to remain in the military indefinitely or may be assigned to work units not of their choosing, both resulting in very low pay.(8) The uncertain length of service, the lack of hope of ever being demobilized, the inability to earn higher wages in the private sector, and notoriously harsh working conditions in the National Service provoke a significant number of youth to flee Eritrea and may also encourage many to resort to the use of international smuggling networks.(8, 10, 17) Adolescent children who attempt to leave Eritrea are sometimes detained or forced to undergo military training despite being younger than the minimum age of 18 for compulsory military recruitment.(3) During the reporting period, the Government attempted to reduce out-migration, including flight from Sawa, and although the circumstances varied considerably, penalties were less severe for those caught fleeing Sawa if they agreed to resume their studies and complete National Service.(13)

In Eritrea, children who are not in school often enter the workforce, and because of the limited number of schools, children may work at a young age.(2, 18) Additionally, children from nomadic communities have difficulty accessing education, as their seasonal movements are incompatible with the formal school calendar.(19)

The Government made no known effort to collect or publish data on the worst forms of child labor.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Eritrea has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor, including its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓

Convention	Ratification
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

In September 2014, the Government ratified the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.(20)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 68 of the Labour Proclamation of Eritrea No. 118/2001 (21)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 69 of the Labour Proclamation of Eritrea No. 118/2001 (21)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 69 of the Labour Proclamation of Eritrea No. 118/2001 (21)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 3 of the Labour Proclamation of Eritrea No. 118/2001; Article 565 of the Penal Code Proclamation of 1957 (21, 22)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 565 and 605 of the Penal Code Proclamation of 1957 (22)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 594, 595, and 604 of the Penal Code Proclamation of 1957 (22)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 8 of the Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995 (15)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	No

The Labour Proclamation of Eritrea No. 118/2001 does not require employers to keep a register containing the name, age, or date of birth of their employees, nor does it prescribe specific penalties for employers of children in hazardous work or employers of children under the minimum age for work.(21, 23)

A child may become an apprentice at age 14 and is not prohibited from engaging in hazardous work in supervised vocational training programs.(21, 23, 24)

Eritrean law does not have prohibitions on child pornography. Additionally, research did not find whether there are laws regulating the use of children in illicit activities.

Minimum age for voluntary military service is not applicable to Eritrea because all citizens age 18 to 40 have the compulsory duty of performing Active National Service under the Proclamation on National Service No. 82/1995.(15)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Human Welfare	Investigate labor abuses, including child labor.(8)
Popular Army	Perform night patrols and refer cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children or other exploitative practices to the Eritrean Police.(1, 25)
Eritrean Defense Forces	Refer cases of the worst forms of child labor to the Eritrean Police or the Ministry of Labor.(1, 25)

Eritrea

NO ADVANCEMENT - EFFORTS MADE BUT COMPLICIT

Organization/Agency	Role
Eritrean Police	Enforce laws and investigate referred cases of child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.(1, 25)
National Security Administration	Work with the Eritrean police to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(8)

Research found no evidence that law enforcement agencies in Eritrea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, no information was available regarding the number and training of labor inspectors, the number and type of labor inspections, child labor law violations, and citations or penalties issued.(14)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, no information was available regarding the number and training of investigators, the number of investigations, prosecutions, and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.(14)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Research found no evidence that the Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Eritrea has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
The National Plan of Action on Child Labor and National Program of Action on Children	Prevent child labor and support victims by reintegrating them with families, communities, and schools.(1) Incorporated into a Comprehensive Child Policy and the UN Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework.(25)
UN Strategic Partnership Cooperation Framework (2013–2016)	Aligns with the Government's priorities, including protecting children from exploitative situations, and designed in consultation with the Government.(1, 26)
National Policy on Education	Establishes 8 years of compulsory, free education for all citizens.(23, 27)

Research did not uncover the extent to which the National Plan of Action on Child Labor and National Program of Action on Children have been implemented, or what their impact has been on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor. The Government's compulsory military training requirements for 12th graders may diminish the impact of Eritrea's policies to combat the worst forms of child labor on all those wishing to obtain high school diplomas. In addition, the Government's use of compulsory labor through the Maetot program may also diminish these efforts.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Eritrea participated in one program that may have an impact on child labor (Table 7).

Table 7. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
UNICEF Country Program (2013–2016)*	UNICEF program in collaboration with the Government that aims to build on previous progress in the areas of complementary education and nomadic education, and to assist the Government in enhancing the quality of basic education.(18) UNICEF also works with the Ministry of Labor to provide social integration and counseling services to approximately 3,500 street children.(28)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

Research found no evidence of programs to specifically address the worst forms of child labor in Eritrea, or programs that target areas in which the majority of children work, including agriculture and domestic service.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Eritrea (Table 8).

Table 8. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify ILO C. 182 on the Worst Forms of Child Labor.	2013 – 2014
	Amend the Labor Proclamation to require employers to keep a register containing the name and age or date of birth of their employees, and provide penalties for employers of children in hazardous work and employers of children under the legal minimum age.	2010 – 2014
	Prohibit children in supervised vocational training programs from engaging in hazardous work, in line with international conventions.	2009 – 2014
	Enact legislation against child pornography and to prohibit the use of children in illicit activities.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Collect and publish data on the number of inspectors and investigators and their training, labor inspections, criminal investigations, and other steps taken to enforce laws.	2009 – 2014
Coordination	Establish a coordinating mechanism to combat the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014
Government Policies	Implement child labor objectives in national policies and development plans by including budgets, detailed action plans, and targets related to the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that children under age 18 are not recruited into Active National Service.	2009 – 2014
	Cease requiring children to perform compulsory labor under the Maetot program during the school break.	2009 – 2014
Social Programs	Strengthen the education system by building more schools and developing alternative educational programs for nomadic communities.	2010 – 2014
	Conduct research on child labor, including its worst forms.	2009 – 2014
	Assess the impact of the UNICEF Education Program on child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Develop appropriate social protection programs for street children and children working in agriculture, domestic service, and the worst forms of child labor.	2009 – 2014

28. U.S. Embassy- Asmara Official. E-mail communication to USDOL Official. April 21, 2015.

In 2014, Ethiopia made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government of Ethiopia ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography. The Government also made a number of efforts to improve labor law enforcement, and participated in and implemented several programs, including the launching of a large-scale education improvement project, to combat the worst forms of child labor. However, children in Ethiopia are engaged in child labor including in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work. Ethiopia still lacks a compulsory education law which leaves children vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor. Social programs to combat child labor have not sufficiently targeted sectors with a high incidence of child labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ethiopia are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in domestic work.(1, 2) Data from the Government's 2011 Demographic and Health Survey (DHS) show that most children work for a family business. In addition, DHS data indicate that the percentages of child labor are higher among males and in rural areas.(3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ethiopia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	22.0 (5,545,319)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	54.0
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	17.0
Primary Completion Rate (%)		47.4

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2006, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey, 2011.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Planting and harvesting apples,* coffee,* cotton,* onions,* bananas,* flowers,* sugarcane,* and tea* (6-14)
	Herding cattle (11, 12, 14, 15)
	Fishing,*† activities unknown (11-13, 16, 17)
Industry	Mining† gold (10, 17)
	Quarrying*† and working at stone-crusher plants*† (11, 16)
	Construction*† and manufacturing,* activities unknown (11-13, 17, 18)
	Making pottery products* (11, 19)
Services	Traditional weaving of handwoven textiles (11, 12, 20-22)
	Domestic work† (17, 18, 21)
	Unpaid household services, including carrying heavy loads of water* (11, 23)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Services	Street work,† including as shoe shiners, assistants to taxi drivers,* vendors, porters,* and beggars (11-14, 17, 24-28)
	Garbage scavenging (29)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (17, 18, 30-32)
	Domestic work, herding, street vending, and traditional weaving of hand-woven textiles, each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (11, 33-36)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In Ethiopia, children work in the traditional weaving industry in Addis Ababa and in the Gamo Gofa and Wolayita Zones.(11, 12, 20-22) Anecdotal evidence suggests that some child weavers are held in debt bondage.(35, 37) In addition, children are trafficked from rural areas to Addis Ababa and to other regions of the country for forced labor in the weaving industry.(11, 33, 36) The Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions reports an increase in child labor in the construction industry in recent years.(18)

Although the Government has improved access to education, the lack of adequate schools in rural areas increases children’s risk of entering the workforce at a young age.(17, 38-40) In addition, although primary education is free, the cost of school supplies keeps some children from attending school.(1, 10) Droughts and floods also hindered access to education in Afar; Amhara; Benishangul-Gumuz; Dire Dawa; Gambella; Harar; Oromia; Somali Region; Southern Nations, Nationalities, and Peoples Region (SNNPR); and Tigray.(28, 41) In SNNPR, the sexual abuse and harassment of girls is also a barrier to education.(40) Although the Vital Events Registration Proclamation mandates the registration of all births, many children in Ethiopia are not registered. Unable to prove their citizenship, nonregistered children may have difficulty accessing services such as education.(21, 42-45) In 2013, the Government established the Vital Events Registration Agency to assist with the registration of births. The rollout of the Proclamation has been delayed by the absence of uniform national identification cards.(36, 44, 46)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ethiopia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

During the reporting period, the Government ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict and the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.(47, 48)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	14	Article 89(2) of the Labor Proclamation (49)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 89(1) and 89(3) of the Labor Proclamation (49)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 89(4) of the Labor Proclamation; Activities Prohibited for Young Workers Directive (49-51)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 18(3) of the Constitution (52)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 18(2) of the Constitution; Articles 597, 635, and 637 of the Criminal Code; local bylaws (52-54)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Article 634 of the Criminal Code (53, 54)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 525 of the Criminal Code (53)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 270 of the Criminal Code (53)
Compulsory Education Age	No
Free Public Education	No

* No conscription (53)

Ethiopian law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Article 89(5) of the Labor Proclamation allows children ages 14 to 16 to engage in certain forms of hazardous work if this work is performed following a government-approved vocational training course.(49, 55) The minimum age provisions of the law do not apply to children working outside of a contractual employment relationship. (2, 55, 56) In addition, the penalties outlined in article 184 of the Labor Proclamation for violating child labor laws are low and do not generally deter violations.(49, 57)

There is no law establishing compulsory education in Ethiopia. The lack of compulsory education may increase the risk of children's involvement in the worst forms of child labor, as they are not legally required to be in school.(18, 55)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA)/Occupational Safety and Health Case Team (OSHCT)	Enforce occupational safety, health, and wage and hour protections, which include child labor laws, at industrial enterprises in Addis Ababa and Dire Dawa.(54, 58) Collect and analyze data and make policymaking recommendations for labor purposes. The Occupational Safety and Health Case Team (OSHCT) is located within Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA).(14, 58, 59)
Regional Bureaus of Social and Labor Affairs (BOLSAs) and City Administration	Conduct labor inspections at the zonal offices, and at the regional and city levels.(57) In the case of the BOLSA office in Addis Ababa, operate an occupational safety and health laboratory to identify workplace hazards.(43)
Ethiopian Federal Police and the Ministry of Justice (MOJ)	Investigate and prosecute criminal violations of laws that protect against the worst forms of child labor.(10, 18) In the case of police stations at the regional level, employ a trained child protection officer, and employ Child Protection Units for the 10 subcity-level police stations in Addis Ababa.(31)
The Human Trafficking and Narcotics Section	Collaborate with the prosecutor's office to conduct investigations, prosecute offenders, and report and collect trafficking data. Located in the Organized Crime Investigation Unit of the Federal Police.(10, 18, 36)

Law enforcement agencies in Ethiopia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor and Social Affairs (MOLSA) employed 382 labor inspectors. The increase from 291 in 2013 returns the level of inspectors to 2012 levels, but the high turnover of inspectors is common due to better-paying jobs in the private sector.(2, 57) In response, MOLSA raised inspectors' salaries in 2014 by between 31 and 42 percent.(2) During the year, 35 professional trainers were trained to provide training to labor inspectors, including a component on child labor. In addition, 135 new labor inspectors were trained, including on how to bring cases to court.(2) In July of 2014, MOLSA issued a National Labor Safety, Health Policy and Strategy to enhance enforcement efforts.(2) Funding, facilities, and equipment were reported to be insufficient.(18)

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

During the year, MOLSA conducted 37,500 labor inspections, 14 of which were complaint based inspections.(60) However, the information on the number of labor inspections was not published publicly. (2) MOLSA does not disaggregate child labor data, and research found no information on the number of child labor law violations found, including in what industries or types of employment, or whether the violations were remedied; what type of referral mechanisms were in place; how many citations were issued; or whether appropriate penalties were applied.(18, 59) Labor inspectors do not have the authority to directly impose penalties. Inspectors, therefore, advise employers on compliance issues.(57)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, a total of 456 checkpoint police officers were trained on child labor, identifying and investigating human trafficking, and referring to relevant agencies.(2, 61) Information for the reporting period was not available on the number and training of Ethiopian Federal Police Human Trafficking investigators or the type and quality of criminal investigations. In 2014, the Human Trafficking and Narcotics Section identified 99 cases of human trafficking, although it is unclear how many involved children. Of these, 93 cases were prosecuted pertaining to 118 suspected offenders.(61, 62) Federal courts secured 46 convictions for trafficking in persons in 35 cases. In addition, the Ethiopian Federal Police investigated 10 cases of child labor, and it arrested and transferred a total of 13 suspected offenders to prosecutors.(60, 62). During the year, 139 judges were trained on child labor issues.(2, 61) It is reported that police departments and district officials refer victims of the worst forms of child labor to NGO-run shelters and government orphanages.(33) During the year, the Wolayita and Gamo Gofa zones prevented 563 children from being trafficked.(2) The Federal Police also reported that it routinely intercepted children along the borders during the reporting period.(2, 31) Courts in the SNNPR sentenced 21 people for trafficking children, resulting in prison sentences ranging from two to seven years.(2) Although the Government attained prosecutions and convictions of transnational human trafficking during the year, there are low prosecution and conviction rates for the internal trafficking of children for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(36, 61)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Coordinate activities on the worst forms of child labor. Includes members from MOLSA; the Ministry of Women, Children, and Youth Affairs (MOWYCA); and the Ministry of Education.(18)
MOLSA's Deputy Minister Forum	Combat the worst forms of child labor at the national level. Meets on a monthly basis and includes participants from the Ethiopian Employers' Federation and Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions.(18)
MOLSA child labor desk	Coordinate efforts between MOLSA and MOWYCA on child labor issues.(14, 43, 63)
National Steering Committee against Sexual Exploitation of Children	Develop action plans and coordinate activities against the commercial sexual exploitation of children.(38)
National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons	Address international exploitation, including the worst forms of child labor. Chaired by the Deputy Prime Minister and composed of all federal ministers and regional presidents.(18, 31, 61) Meets twice per year.(61)
National Human Trafficking Task Force	Develop action plans and coordinate activities against trafficking in persons on a quarterly basis. (33, 64) Chaired by the State Minister of Administration, Justice Planning, and Implementation and includes representation by deputy state ministers. In 2014, conducted monitoring trips to four primary regions of origin of victims of human trafficking.(61)
Regional Technical Working Groups on Trafficking	Identify trends and areas in need of public awareness campaigns on human trafficking. Meets on a weekly basis and includes officials from regional federal ministries and agencies.(31, 33, 36)

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Child Protection Committees, Child Rights Clubs, and Orphans and Vulnerable Children (OVC) Task Forces	Promote children's rights; provide children with food and school supplies; and train members on child labor issues, case management, international child labor standards, and Ethiopian child labor laws. Composed of children, police, health workers, and teachers.(12, 14, 65, 66)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ethiopia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013-2015)	Includes guidelines on child labor identification, withdrawal, reintegration, and educational policies. Available in Amharic.(14, 43, 67) In 2014, 118 participants from the federal parliament, federal agencies, and regional governments attended a training on the implementation of the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labor.(68)
Protocols and Guidelines for Identification, Withdrawal, Rehabilitation, and Integration of Victims of the Worst forms of Child Labor in Solid Waste Management and the Traditional Weaving Sector (2010)	Describes the work conditions of children engaged in garbage scavenging and in the traditional weaving sector; includes guidelines for stakeholders to implement interventions.(29, 69)
National Labor Safety, Health Policy and Strategy†	Seeks to abolish child labor and ensure that working conditions for youth, women, and disabled workers are improved.(2)
Social Protection Policy (2014)†	Aims to improve the quality of, and access to, basic education and health services; includes child labor concerns.(60, 70)
National Youth Policy (2005)	Addresses the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and illicit work.(71)
National Employment Policy and Strategy of Ethiopia (2009)	Describes the root causes of child labor in Ethiopia and lists interventions that may be used to combat child labor, including income-generating activities and awareness raising.(72)
UNDAF (2012-2015)	Promotes improved access to education and livelihood services for vulnerable children; seeks to protect children from abuse, violence, and exploitation; and seeks to withdraw children from child labor and rehabilitate them.(73)
Standard Service Delivery Guidelines for Orphans and Vulnerable Children's Care (2010)	Identifies that OVCs are at increased risk of exploitative child labor and includes the goal of keeping children in school.(74)
National Human Rights Action Plan (2013-2015)	Aims to strengthen the implementation of human rights in Ethiopia, including by making efforts to eliminate exploitative child labor.(75-77)
National Policy Framework for Early Childhood Care and Education (2010)*	Supports early education programs for children and community-based non-formal school readiness programs.(78, 79)
Growth and Transformation Plan (2010-2015)*	Calls for the expansion of education services and outlines interventions to provide greater opportunities for vulnerable households to engage in decent work.(80)
Education and Training Policy (1994) *	Provides free education through secondary education.(81)
National Technical Vocational Education and Training Strategy (2008)*	Aims to increase employment opportunities for school dropouts and youth without formal education through technology and skills training.(50, 82)
General Education Quality Assurance Package (2008)*	Seeks to improve the quality of general education through curriculum development, textbook assessment, teacher training, and school construction throughout Ethiopia.(83)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

The National Youth Policy does not have a budget or detailed action plan related to the worst forms of child labor.(54, 71) In addition, the National Child Policy and National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, which were drafted to protect the rights of children, have not yet been adopted.(61, 63, 84)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Ethiopia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Child-Labor-Free Zones	Government program that pilots child-labor-free zones in the cities of Addis Ababa and Adama, in collaboration with the Forum on Sustainable Child Empowerment. Child protection officers, labor inspectors, police officers, and other stakeholders support this initiative by reintegrating child laborers.(14).
Ethiopians Fighting Against Child Exploitation (2011-2015)	$10 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by World Vision that targets 20,000 children engaged in or at risk of entering exploitative child labor, particularly in the traditional weaving industry and in rural areas.(12) Assists 7,000 households of targeted children to promote sustainable livelihoods, and collaborates with MOLSA to coordinate the provision of services and provide occupational safety and health training to labor inspectors. Operates primarily in Addis Ababa and in the Gamo Gofa and Wolayita Zones.(12) In 2014, the program raised public awareness of the worst forms of child labor through radio programming, television broadcasts and illustrated brochures.(60)
Engaged, Educated, Empowered, Ethiopian Youth Project (2014-2018)	$10 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by World Vision that targets 12,000 male and female youth both in and out of school who are between ages 14 and 17 and engaged in or at risk of entering exploitative child labor.(85) Assists 7,500 households of targeted youth to promote sustainable livelihoods, increase access to education and decent work opportunities. Operates primarily in the SNNPR and Amhara Regions.(85)
Global Action Program on Child Labor Issues Project (2011-2016)	USDOL-funded project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to build the capacity of the Government and develop strategic policies to address the elimination of child labor in Ethiopia.(86)
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP) (2013-2017)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Ethiopia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(87) Aims to conduct a national child labor survey in Ethiopia.(87)
Child Labor Awareness Raising‡	MOLSA programs that raise awareness of child labor issues, including the quarterly media forum that raises awareness through broadcasts on national television; regional- and local-level awareness raising to encourage community members to report child labor violations to the authorities; and awareness raising to address the trafficking of humans from rural to urban areas.(18, 31, 75)
Afar Region Emergency Migration Response Center	Center operated by the Ethiopian Federal Police to assist human trafficking victims by providing them with shelter and transportation back to their villages, in collaboration with the IOM.(31, 63)
Cash Transfer Program (2011-2014)*	3-year government program, which, in partnership with UNICEF, provides vulnerable populations, including child laborers, with cash transfer in two districts of the Tigray Region, and in the Afar, Oromia, and SNNPR regions.(10, 46, 67, 88) Aims to improve school attendance and enrollment, and to support the health of the children in the targeted districts. Operates through Community Care Coalitions.(46)
Productive Safety Net Program Phase II (PSNP)‡	Government program that has assisted approximately 8.3 million beneficiaries as of 2014.(89-93) Considered Africa's second largest social protection program, it includes several components, one of which provides cash and in-kind transfers to OVCs and households without able-bodied adults who can work. This component has been shown to reduce the amount of time children spend doing household work and increase the amount of time children spend in school.(89, 91, 93, 94)
Decent Work Country Program (2013-2015)	Describes the child labor situation in Ethiopia and includes targets for the elimination of child labor, such as the establishment of child labor units at the City Administration level.(95)
General Education Quality Improvement Project II (2014-2018)†	$550 million project funded by the World Bank and other donors aiming to improve learning conditions across Ethiopia through curriculum development, textbook assessment, teacher training, and school construction.(96)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Ethiopia.

While the Government participates in and implements several programs to combat the worst forms of child labor, its efforts have not sufficiently targeted sectors with a high incidence of the worst forms of child labor, such as agriculture and domestic work. In addition, in rare cases, the promotion of employment through the public works component of PSNP Phase II has been shown to increase the amount of time children work, as families substitute adult family members' labor with children's labor to receive benefits under the program.(94)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ethiopia (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure that the minimum age when children may enter hazardous work following vocational training is changed from 14 to 16, in line with ILO C. 138.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that relevant child labor laws and regulations apply equally to children working in non-contractual and contractual employment.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that penalties are high enough to deter child labor law violations.	2013 – 2014
	Establish a compulsory education age that is consistent with the minimum age of employment.	2012 – 2014
Enforcement	Ensure that OSHCT and BOLSA inspectors have adequate resources to conduct systematic inspections in all sectors of the economy.	2009 – 2014
	Gather and publish information about available referral mechanisms, the number of inspections, child labor law violations found, citations, and criminal prosecutions initiated and issued, and the penalties applied.	2009 – 2014
	Enforce the Labor Proclamation by authorizing the inspectorate to determine and assess penalties when child labor law violations are found.	2013 – 2014
	Make information publicly available on the number and training of investigators and the type and quality of criminal investigations conducted.	2014
	Separate trafficking statistics for children and adults.	2011 – 2014
	Increase efforts to improve the likelihood of successful prosecution and conviction of offenders who internally traffic children for forced labor and sexual exploitation.	2011 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into this policy.	2013 – 2014
	Include budgets and action plans related to the worst forms of child labor in development agendas and policies.	2009 – 2014
	Adopt the National Child Policy and National Action Plan Against Trafficking.	2012 – 2014
Social Programs	Improve access to education in rural areas by building additional schools, implementing programs that protect communities from droughts and floods, ensuring children are registered at birth, and addressing sexual abuse and harassment in schools.	2010 – 2014
	Ensure that children can complete primary school by subsidizing or defraying the cost of school supplies.	2010 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing social programs may have on addressing child labor.	2012 – 2014
	Develop social protection programs for the withdrawal from or prevention of children engaged in agriculture and domestic work.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Fiji made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations (MEPIR) appointed 18 additional labor inspectors and for the first time, Fiji's courts convicted and sentenced two perpetrators for the crime of trafficking in children and issued a heavy penalty for a violation of child labor law. The Government also approved the Free Education Grant policy that provides 13 years of free, basic education to children in Fiji and implemented a transportation assistance program that will improve access to schools for children in the most remote areas of the country. However, children in Fiji are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work. Fiji has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography or the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons. In addition, the Government has yet to finalize the National Action Plan for Child Labor and 5-year Strategic Plan for Combatting Child Labor.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Fiji are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and street work.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Fiji. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	Unavailable
Primary Completion Rate (%)		103.6

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(4)

Data were unavailable from Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis, 2015.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Sugarcane farming,* including cutting sugarcane*† (1-3, 6-8)
	Planting, picking, spraying pesticides,† and spraying fertilizer in tobacco fields* (1)
	Production of coconuts,* rice,* roots (including dalo and yaqona ),* tubers,* and other kinds of vegetables* (1, 9)
	Pig farming* and goat and cattle herding* (1)
	Fishing* and deep-sea diving*† (1)
Services	Street work, including pushing wheelbarrows for shoppers in markets, vending, repairing and washing cars, repairing and shining shoes, and begging (1, 3, 8, 10-13)
	Selling fruit (1, 12)
	Collecting bottles and scrap metal*† (1)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 3, 14-20)
	Forced labor in agriculture,* begging,* domestic work,* and industrial sectors* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking (3, 16, 21, 22)
	Used in illicit activities, including in drug trafficking* (1, 14, 23)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Commercial sexual exploitation of children is a concern in Fiji, particularly in urban centers and near ports where fishing and other vessels dock.(1, 3, 14, 15, 17, 24) One source suggests that a large number of children from squatter settlements in Suva and Lami are engaged in child labor working in garages, washing cars, and selling food, including fruits and vegetables. Many of these children miss school in order to work.(12) Parents sometimes send their child to live with families in cities or near schools to facilitate their continuing education and to perform light household work. There are reports that the adopted households sometimes force children into involuntary domestic work or sexual activity in exchange for food, clothing, shelter, or school fees.(3, 16)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Fiji has ratified some key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict

Although both human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children are issues in Fiji, the Government has not ratified the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography or the Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
The Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations (MEPIR)	Enforce laws on child labor, including its worst forms. Monitor child employment including compliance with the requirement of the minimum age for employment and the Employment Relations Promulgation.(2, 8) Oversee 14 Divisional Labor Offices responsible for investigating cases of child labor and making appropriate referrals.(8)
The Child Labor Unit (CLU)	Serve as the mechanism within MEPIR for filing and responding to child labor complaints.(2) Coordinate activities at the national, divisional, and district levels through Interagency Committees on Child Abuse. These committees include the police; Ministries of Social Welfare, Labor, Health, and Education; the Public Prosecutor's Office; the Solicitor General's Office; and NGOs working on child labor issues.(2) Conduct training on child labor within MEPIR and in communities, schools, and industries where child labor occurs. Maintain a 24-hour phone line to accept reports of child labor and refer children to social services when appropriate.(2, 8)
Employment Relations Tribunal (ERT)	Adjudicate on alleged violations of child labor provisions in the Employment Relations Promulgation.(8)
Fiji Police Force	Enforce laws on child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and other illicit activities.(8) Maintain a Human Trafficking Unit (HTU) to investigate allegations of human trafficking and to provide training focused on combating human trafficking to other police units.(24) Collaborate closely with the Department of Immigration and the Police Transnational Crime Unit.(34)
The Department of Immigration	Coordinate with the Fiji Police Force to investigate cases involving underage victims of commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking, which are then tried in the criminal court system.(35)
The Department of Social Welfare, and the Department of Public Prosecutions	Enforce laws on child trafficking.(2) Operate four homes for child trafficking victims.(34)

Law enforcement agencies in Fiji took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, the Government appointed 18 new labor inspectors, bringing the total employees in the labor inspectorate up to 63.(36, 37) The Child Labor Unit (CLU) provided training to all 63 inspectors throughout its seven district offices. Training included general information on child labor and hazardous work issues as well as instruction on child labor withdrawal procedures, with an emphasis on returning children to the mainstream education system or to technical and vocational training programs.(36)

The Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations (MEPIR) also provided trainings to approximately 100 stakeholders in the sugar industry, including farmers, Fiji Sugar Corporation field staff, and Cane Producing Associations. Trainings focused on the importance of withdrawing children from hazardous work in the sugarcane industry and returning them to school.(38) The CLU utilizes a reporting system targeted at withdrawing children from the production of sugar, tobacco, and other agricultural work, as well as one for children working in markets during school hours.(38) The reporting system includes forms to be completed by labor inspectors or Fiji Sugar Corporation Field Officers.(38, 39)

In 2014, MEPIR conducted a total of 2,735 inspections in 11 districts and identified five cases of child labor.(8, 36) Inspectors carried out routine and complaint-driven child labor inspections, which consisted of both desk reviews and site visits. Labor inspectors are authorized to conduct unannounced site visits as needed.(8) However, as labor inspectors are stationed in larger, more populated areas, they sometimes find it a challenge to access smaller, rural communities and outer islands.(2) The inspectorate is not empowered to assess penalties but may refer cases to the Employment Relations Tribunal (ERT) for prosecution if it suspects an employer is violating child labor law.(8)

MEPIR utilizes the National Child Labor Database to register, track, and respond expeditiously to reports of child labor in Fiji. Seven data operators have been appointed to manage the database in seven districts, and 24 additional officers were trained on child labor reporting procedures.(8, 36) Fiji has robust referral mechanisms for ensuring that children found engaged in child labor are referred to appropriate social services.(8) As a result of inspections, four children were withdrawn from child labor. Three of these children were returned to school and one was placed in a Technical and Vocational Training Program.(36) During the reporting period, MEPIR registered three child labor cases in the ERT. In one of these cases, the court found the employer guilty for two violations of child labor law and issued a fine of $8,600. According to MEPIR, this is the first time in Fiji's history that a perpetrator has been given a heavy sentence for a child labor violation.(8, 38)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Fiji Police Force employed four officers responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(8, 22, 40) In 2014, the Government funded anti-human trafficking training for police personnel through the Fiji Police Human Trafficking Unit's (HTU) workshops, with the goal of ensuring that every police station has an officer trained in human trafficking-related issues. The HTU also routinely conducts training for new recruits at the Police Academy.(22, 34)

During the reporting period, law enforcement officers investigated one child trafficking case and referred the two children involved to appropriate social services.(8) It is standard practice for the courts to place child victims in the custody of the Department of Social Welfare, which operates four gender-segregated homes for children.(22) In 2014, one prosecution was launched and a second pending case from 2013 was finalized. For the first time, the High Court of Fiji convicted two men on charges of slavery and domestic trafficking of children for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. The first accused is serving a 16-year prison sentence and the second is serving a 12-year sentence.(8)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role &amp; Description
The Inter-Agency Network (IAN)	Focus on child labor issues at the district and provincial level. Monitor and report on cases of noncompliance, and conduct awareness-raising activities in collaboration with the Child Labor Unit (CLU).(38) Network consists of several interagency committees in nine towns in Fiji: Suva, Sigatoka, Nadi, Ba, Lautoka, Tavua, Rakiraki, Labasa, and Taveuni.(2, 39) Committees are comprised of the Fiji Police Force, the Director of Public Prosecutions Office, the Ministry of Woman, Children, and Poverty Alleviation, the Ministry of Education, and various NGOs.(36)
The Inter-Agency Taskforce on Beggars	Address issues related to children who beg and other exploited children. Includes the Fiji Police Force, the Department of Social Welfare, the Ministry of Local Government, the Suva City Council, the Fiji National Council for Disabled Persons, the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Taukei Affairs, and local NGOs.(2)
The Interagency Trafficking Task Force	Implement the National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking. Government-wide task force, headed by the Department of Immigration.(2, 8, 34)

During the reporting period, the Inter-Agency Network (IAN) met regularly to coordinate child labor issues at the grassroots level. IAN developed a training program for the general public to raise awareness of the hazardous work list and of the long-term consequences of child labor.(36) According to Ministry of Employment, Productivity, and Industrial Relations (MEPIR), IAN trained 1,125 parents, students, and teachers in 2014.(36)

In January, the Inter-Agency Taskforce on Beggars declared a zero-tolerance policy on child begging.(2) Since then, the Taskforce has been working with the Fiji Police Force to withdraw children from begging in the streets and refer them to state rehabilitation facilities when necessary.(41) The Inter-Agency Trafficking Task Force was inactive in 2013 and 2014.(8)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Fiji has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking	Guides the Government's efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons. Focuses on public awareness raising and education on human trafficking-related issues and prioritizes anti-trafficking training for government officials.(34)
Free Education Grant 2014†	Provides 12 years of tuition-free education for children in Fiji. Covers the cost of school fees and textbooks for students in 904 eligible primary and secondary schools.(36, 42, 43)
UNDAF Pacific (2013-2017)*	Promotes sustainable development and economic growth for vulnerable groups in fourteen Pacific Island Countries and Territories: Cook Islands, Fiji, Federated States of Micronesia, Kiribati, Nauru, Niue, Palau, Marshall Islands, Samoa, Solomon Islands, Tokelau, Tonga, Tuvalu, and Vanuatu. In Fiji, includes initiatives to improve access to quality education, health, and housing services for children and strengthen child protective systems.(44, 45)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In 2014, the Government of Fiji continued consultation on the National Action Plan for Child Labor and the accompanying Five-year Strategic Plan for Combatting Child Labor, Including the Worst Forms.(37) The Government anticipated the Plan would be implemented by September 2013 and operational through 2018, but it appears the Plan remains in draft form.(2, 38) The Government has not provided updates on the comprehensive implementation of the National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking.(24)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Fiji funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing of child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Tackling Child Labor through Education (TACKLE) Project (2008-2014)	Jointly launched by the European Commission and the ILO to combat child labor through education in 12 African and Caribbean countries and the Pacific group of states (ACP).(46) Aimed to support government efforts to remove children from commercial sexual exploitation and work in the sugarcane fields, and to increase capacity to address child labor and poverty in squatter settlements, which include a large number of vulnerable children.(47-50) Established the CLU, drafted a national action plan to eliminate child labor, trained government officials on the worst forms of child labor, and supported legislative reviews on labor and education in Fiji.(48, 50)
Safety Net Project‡	Government program that aims to combat human trafficking at the community level, largely by funding rehabilitation services targeting female victims of commercial sexual exploitation under the age of 18. Receives referrals from various entities including the Fiji Police.(51)
Food voucher and bus fare assistance*	Ministry of Education program that provides food vouchers and subsidized bus fares to offset the cost of education for children attending remote schools.(38, 42)
School transportation assistance scheme*†‡	Ministry of Education program implemented through the Transport Assistance Unit that provides $70,000 for the purchase of four boats to ensure that children in areas inaccessible by roads are able to attend school.(52)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Fiji.

Fiji does not have sufficient support services available to address the particular needs of child victims of human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, especially for boys and for children in remote areas.(53) NGOs provide limited support services, but these are concentrated in the capital city of Suva.(39, 53)The Fiji Police's Sexual Offenses Unit has identified the lack of services for child victims, including counseling and victim-friendly court procedures, as one of their greatest challenges in protecting child trafficking victims.(39)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Fiji (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography, and the Palermo Protocol.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure that the Trafficking Task Force meets regularly to address implementation of the National Plan of Action to Eliminate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking.	2014
Government Policies	Finalize and Implement the National Action Plan for Child Labor and 5-year Strategic Plan for Combatting Child Labor, Including the Worst Forms.	2013 – 2014
	Provide public updates on the implementation of the National Plan of Action to Eradicate Trafficking in Persons and Child Trafficking.	2013 – 2014
Social Programs	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor prevention and elimination.	2014
	Provide support services for child trafficking victims, including effective counseling, specialized shelters and victim-friendly court procedures.	2010 – 2014

In 2014, Gabon made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government ratified UN CRC Optional Protocol on a Communications Procedure, which allows children to bring complaints to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child when their rights have been violated. The Government also completed a Rapid Situational Analysis on Child Domestic Work which includes a proposal to address gaps in social services, and launched a program to provide birth certificates to 20,000 Gabonese citizens with birth certificates. However, children in Gabon are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and street vending. The Government continues to delay the development of a list of hazardous occupations prohibited for children under age 18 and has yet to conduct a proposed study on children trafficked into domestic work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Gabon are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work and street vending.(1-6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children’s work and education in Gabon. Data on some of these indicators are not available from the sources used in this report.

Table 1. Statistics on Children’s Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	22.3 (83,073)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	94.4

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Gabon is primarily a destination and transit country for children from other countries in Central and West Africa who are the victims of child trafficking.(2, 5, 11, 13-15) Boys in Gabon are forced to work as street vendors or mechanics, while girls are forced into commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and work in restaurants.(5, 9, 11, 13) There is limited evidence of child trafficking occurring within Gabon as well.(3, 13, 16) In 2011, the Government made plans to undertake a survey on human trafficking. The survey was intended to include human trafficking routes and areas in which forced labor involving children was practiced. However, due to the lack of resources, the survey has yet to be conducted.(10, 16, 17)

According to the Constitution, education is free and compulsory until age 16, but in practice, students were often required to pay for supplies and school fees which may be prohibitive.(9, 18-20) The country also suffers from a shortage of schools and teachers, particularly in rural areas, and the school year has occasionally been disrupted by prolonged strikes.(18, 21-23) Reports suggest that some children, especially girls, are pressured by teachers to have sex in exchange for good grades.(24) The lack of schools and teachers, safe learning environments, and associated costs might increase the likelihood that children will enter into the worst forms of child labor.

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Gabon has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

On April 14, 2014, the Government ratified UN CRC Optional Protocol on a Communications Procedure, which allows children to bring complaints to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child when their rights have been violated. Gabon is the only African country to ratify this optional protocol.(25-27)

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 177 of the Labor Code; Article 2 of Decree N° 0651/PR/MTEPS Establishing Individual Exceptions to the Minimum Age for Admission to Employment (28-31)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 177 of the Labor Code (28-30)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations and/or Activities for Children	Yes		Article 177 of the Labor Code; Decree N° 275 of 1962 (28-30, 32)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 4 of the Labor Code (28)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Law N° 09/04 Preventing and Fighting Against Child Trafficking; Decree N° 0031/PR/MTEFP; Ordinance N° 4/2001 (11, 33, 34)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 260 and 263 of the Penal Code; Law N° 09/04 (11, 35)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	20	Act N° 004/98 (36)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Article 1 of the Constitution; Article 2 of Act N° 21/2011; Article 344.8 of the Penal Code (19, 20, 35)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 1 of the Constitution; Article 2 of Act N° 21/2011 (19, 20)

* No conscription (36, 37)

Article 177 of the Labor Code prohibits children under the age of 18 from being employed in work considered as the worst form of child labor, but this does not apply to children without a formal employment contract.(30, 38) Additionally, the Labor Code does not comprehensively prohibit the categorical worst forms of child labor as described in ILO C.182, nor does it explicitly prohibit the use, procuring, or offering of a child for illicit activities. Existing legislation is not specific enough to facilitate enforcement.(6, 29) According to Article 177 of the Labor Code, the Ministries of Labor and Health, in consultation with employers and workers’ organizations, are responsible for drafting a list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibited for children and setting the age limit to which the prohibition applies. However, these ministries have not begun this task and the hazardous work list has not been updated since 1962.(6, 29, 32)

In addition to the prohibitions against hazardous work, Article 178 of the Labor Code permits labor inspectors to require health exams for anyone under age 21 who may be asked to perform work that is considered “high risk” to their health. However, the Labor Code does not specify the types of work that are considered “high risk.”(29) Additionally, Article 2 of Decree N° 0651/PR/ MTEPS Establishing Individual Exceptions to the Minimum Age for Admission to Employment permits children under age 16 to perform light work with parental permission. However, it does not set a minimum age for light work or include a list specifying the kinds of light work allowed.(31) The ILO Committee of Experts has also expressed concern over this gap in the law.(38)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Professional Training (MLEPT)	Receive, investigate, and address child labor complaints through its inspectors.(4) Maintain a free helpline for victims of child trafficking that provides monitoring, counseling, and information services. Oversees the procedure for returning victims of child trafficking and exploitation to their families.(13, 17, 39) Refer cases of child trafficking to the Ministry of the Interior’s Police Force.(10)
Ministry of Health and Social Welfare (MHSW)	Provide social services and assistance to vulnerable children; assist in repatriation or resettlement processes for victims of child trafficking; operate shelters for victims of child trafficking.(10)
Ministry of the Interior’s Police Force	Investigate child labor law violations and refer cases to the Ministry of Justice for prosecution.(4, 40)
Ministry of Justice	Enforce child labor laws by prosecuting child labor complaints.(4, 9) Assist in supporting victims of child trafficking while prosecutors and investigators prepare their case.(10)
Local Vigilance Committees	Monitor potential cases of child exploitation and human trafficking at the local level. Identify and intercept children at risk of becoming victims of child trafficking and coordinate assistance to children in need.(13, 17, 34, 40-42)

Law enforcement agencies in Gabon took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, the president re-organized his cabinet in January and October 2014, initiating significant changes to the ministries charged with overseeing social issues, and causing possible disruption to their oversight on child labor issues.(23, 43)

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, one newly-hired labor inspector received training at the Regional African Center for Administration Work in Cameroon, but there was no specific training on child labor for most labor inspectors.(4) Although the government employs approximately 2,000 labor inspectors, social workers, police officials and other individuals to fight against child exploitation, the exact number of labor inspectors the Government employed is not publicly available. Research indicates that the number of inspectors is sufficient in urban centers, but not in rural areas.(4, 30) Additionally, the country's heavily forested terrain in rural areas and a lack of resources such as transportation, fuel, and office supplies limits inspectors' ability to conduct investigations.(4, 13, 30)

Gabon

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, inspectors responded to complaints of child labor violations from NGOs, but did not proactively undertake any investigations. It is not known how many total investigations occurred, although research indicates it was insufficient to adequately enforce labor laws and the Government acknowledges more inspections are needed.(4, 30, 38) Moreover, although Article 178 of the Labor Code permits inspectors to make unannounced visits, none occurred during the reporting period.(4, 28, 29) Inspections were conducted through site visits and in languages spoken by the children being interviewed.(4) The Ministry of Labor, Employment, and Professional Training (MLEPT) referred victims of child labor violations to the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare (MHSW) for social services, and 14 received assistance in 2014.(4)

Although inspectors can suggest penalties, they do not have the authority to assess penalties.(4) Additionally, the number of calls made to the child protection hotline that were related to child labor is unknown.

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, investigators did not receive any specific training on child labor and the exact number of investigators is unknown.(4) Like labor inspectors, the number of investigators in rural areas is insufficient and inspectors lack resources for conducting investigations such as transportation and fuel.(4) However, the Government has reportedly stopped penalizing victims of exploitative child labor and does not treat them as criminals or try them as adults. There were at least 16 investigations into cases of human trafficking, and one prosecution. However, the defendant fled the trial and has not yet been recaptured.(4, 10, 44)

The MHSW referred victims of child trafficking to Government-run or NGO-run shelters for care and assistance. The MHSW provided assistance to at least 14 victims of child trafficking in 2014 and assisted in the repatriation of 12 of these children.(10) The Government did not provide any publicly available information on the total number of investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions or penalties assessed during the reporting period.

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established a mechanism to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-ministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking (IMC)	Coordinate national efforts against child trafficking and other worst forms of child labor by facilitating communication and coordinating enforcement actions among ministries. Led by the MLEPT, it includes the Ministry of Human Rights; Ministry of Justice; Ministry of Interior; MHSW; law enforcement agencies charged with the protection of minors; and local NGOs.(4, 10) Maintains provincial offices and centers for child trafficking victims. Removes children from exploitative labor situations, provides shelter, assists victims with prosecution, and repatriates victims when necessary.(4, 10, 11, 16, 40, 45-47)

As a result of a cabinet reorganization in January 2014, the Ministry of Economy transferred leadership for the Inter-ministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking (IMC) to the MLEPT in January 2014, which may have affected the IMC's effectiveness.(4, 10) Moreover, the IMC did not have sufficient funds to effectively coordinate efforts among ministries and was unable to fully implement its Plan of Action for 2014.(10, 11) However, the IMC continued to respond to complaints of child trafficking, refer victims to social service providers, and work with the courts to prosecute child trafficking violations.(4, 10) A lack of communication between ministries also limited the Government's ability to collect data on the prevalence of human trafficking issues.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Gabon has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
2014 Action Plan of the IMC†	Aims to address the worst forms of child labor by identifying and prosecuting those who use child labor, building capacity to enforce laws against human trafficking, and increasing cooperation with embassies of source countries for child trafficking victims. Led by the IMC, assigns actions to be taken by ministries and NGOs as well as a timeline.(4, 17)
National Manual of Procedures for the Care of Child Victims of Trafficking	Establishes a series of procedures to return a victim of child trafficking to their country of origin or facilitate their integration into Gabon.(16)
Education Policy (2010-2020)*	Aims to make pre-primary education widely available, improve the quality of primary education throughout the country, and improve the quality and access to secondary education.(19)
National Youth Policy of Gabon*	Aims to establish a ministry devoted to youth and strengthen the technical and operational capacities of existing ministries dealing with youth issues. Encourage youth participation in democratic practices by creating a National Youth Council and strengthening the existing Youth Parliament.(48) Improve the lives of youth by providing more professional opportunities, fostering patriotism, and developing good citizenship.(49-51)
UNDAF (2012-2016)*	Establishes six priority areas in alignment with the Millennium Development Goals: (1) promote sustained and diversified growth; (2) develop good infrastructure; (3) improve economic governance; (4) consolidate democratic governance; (5) promote decentralized government; and (6) promote human and social development.(52)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government of Gabon has adopted the 2014 Action Plan of the IMC, research found no evidence of a general policy to address child labor.

The Government of Gabon has drafted separate agreements with Benin, Nigeria, Cameroon, Guinea, Togo, and Mali to combat child trafficking, but they have not been signed by both parties.(5, 18, 30, 53)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms. (Table 8)

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Action Plan on Child Labor Issues Project (2011-2016)	$15 million USDOL-funded 6-year project implemented by the ILO in approximately 40 countries to support the priorities of the Roadmap for Achieving the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor by 2016 established by the Hague Global Child Labor Conference in 2010. Aims to strengthen legal protections and social service delivery for child domestic workers in Gabon.(54) In 2014, completed a Rapid situational Analysis on Child Domestic Work including a proposal assessing and addressing gaps in social services.(54)
Gabon Emergent Strategic Plan (2011-2016)‡	Government program that outlines President Ali Bongo Ondimba's vision for the country's development, which includes a component on improving work conditions and eliminating child labor.(55, 56)
Shelters for Children in Need‡	Shelters operated by the Government and civil society organizations supported by UNICEF that provide victims of child labor, child trafficking, and orphans and other vulnerable children with health care, education, financial support, psycho-social support, and reintegration services.(4, 10, 13, 40, 47, 57, 58)
Repatriation Programs‡	Overseen by the IMC. Resettles children in their country of origin when possible or provides resettlement assistance in Gabon if repatriation is not possible.(10, 11, 59) If the country of origin is unable to provide financial restitution or support for victims of child trafficking, the Government of Gabon absorbs these costs.(10)
Birth Certificate Program‡	Ministry of Interior and MHSW program to provide 20,000 Gabonese citizens with birth certificates.(10, 44)
Africa Contingency Operations Training and Assistance Program‡	Government program to provide anti-trafficking in persons training to Gabonese peacekeepers as part of their preparation for deployment to the UN Support Mission for the Central African Republic. This program was reactivated in 2014 and provided training to approximately 450 peacekeepers.(10, 44)

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Decent Work Country Program (2013-2016)*	Promotes decent work conditions with a focus on creating job opportunities for youth and promoting social protection.(60)

*The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Gabon.

Although Gabon has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem. The Government continued to support existing programs related to child labor in 2014, but reduced funding for these programs as well as the IMC.(4, 10)

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Gabon. (Table 9)

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure hazardous occupations and/or activities prohibited for children are specific enough to facilitate enforcement. Ensure that the legal framework prohibits the use of children in illicit activities and in hazardous occupations for children in all relevant sectors in Gabon.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that laws specify the types of work that are considered “light work” and set a minimum age for light work no younger than 13.	2013 – 2014
Enforcement	Strengthen enforcement of child labor laws by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Providing additional training on child labor issues;</li> <li>■ Increase the number of labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce, particularly outside urban areas;</li> <li>■ Ensuring adequate resources for inspectors to conduct investigations;</li> <li>■ Proactively planning inspections and including unannounced inspections; and</li> <li>■ Authorizing inspectors to determine and/or assess penalties.</li> </ul>	2009 – 2014
	Make statistics regarding the enforcement of child labor laws publicly available, including the number of inspections, prosecutions, violations and citations/penalties assessed and disaggregate the number of complaints related to child labor that are made to the child protection hotline.	2009 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure the Inter-ministerial Committee for the Fight Against Child Trafficking has sufficient funds to carry out its mandate, including improving communication and coordination among ministries.	2013 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Policy, National Youth Policy of Gabon, and UNDAF.	2014
	Sign agreements with origin countries to combat child trafficking.	2014
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the specific activities carried out by children working in agriculture and the informal sector to inform policies and programs.	2014
	Ensure children have access to education by eliminating school fees, increasing the number of teachers and schools in rural areas, and ensuring schools are free from sexual abuse.	2010 – 2014
	Carry out the proposed survey on child trafficking.	2011 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Expand existing programs to address the scope of the child labor problem.	2010 – 2014

In 2014, The Gambia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government's Ministry of Education continued the Conditional Cash Transfer (CCT) initiative that provided subsidies to marabouts to support discontinuing the marabouts' practice of forcing students to beg in the streets. In addition, The Gambia Tourism Board (GTB) co-funded the installation of an electronic billboard at Banjul International Airport to warn visitors of the penalties of engaging in child sex tourism. The GTB also held five seminars on child sex tourism for 190 law enforcement officers, tourism industry operators, and members of the public. However, children in The Gambia continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in street work and commercial sexual exploitation. Gaps in the legal framework persist, such as between compulsory education and minimum working ages. In addition, child labor laws are not effectively enforced, and existing social programs are not sufficient to meet the need.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in The Gambia are engaged in child labor, including in domestic work. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation.(1-3) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in The Gambia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	36.4 (180,954)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	65.7
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	29.6
Primary Completion Rate (%)		70.3

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2014.(4)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2005-2006.(5)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, including protecting crops by chasing animals (1, 6)
Industry	Working in carpentry,* masonry,* sewing,* plumbing,and in metal welding workshops†(1)
	Domestic work* (1)
	Street work,* including vending* (1, 3)
Services	Scavenging for scrap metal and jewelry at dump sites*(3, 6)
	Taxi and bus attendants*(1)
	Auto mechanics*† (1, 3)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1-3, 7)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers* (6, 8-10)
	Forced labor in domestic work and street vending each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 7, 10)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

Gambia, The

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In The Gambia, it is a common practice to send boys to receive education from Koranic teachers called marabouts. Some Koranic students, or almudus, are forced by their teachers to beg in the streets for money and food or to do street vending.(1, 8, 10) Some reports indicate that cases of begging forced on almudus by marabouts have decreased as a result of increased enforcement and a government cash transfer program.(1, 2, 7) However, evidence suggests that instead of requiring almudus to beg, many marabouts now force students to sell items on the street. Almudus in rural areas also work for long hours doing farm work.(1) In addition, the commercial sexual exploitation of children is a serious problem in The Gambia. Children are exploited in brothels and motels in tourist areas.(1, 11, 12)

Children, mostly girls, are trafficked within The Gambia for domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation, including in the tourism industry. Children of both sexes are trafficked to neighboring countries such as Senegal, Sierra Leone, Liberia, Ghana, Nigeria, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, and Benin, where they are subject to commercial sexual exploitation, domestic work, and forced street vending.(1, 7, 10) Children are trafficked from other West African nations, including Ghana and Senegal, to The Gambia for commercial sexual exploitation.(7, 9, 10, 13)

Article 30 of the Constitution mandates free compulsory education; however, families are often required to buy books and uniforms for their children as well as contribute to the school fund, which is used to fund certain activities in the school.(2, 14, 15) The Government consistently waived school fees for girls in order to increase their enrollment.(2, 8)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Gambia has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

	Convention	Ratification
	ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
	ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
	UN CRC	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
	UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
	Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 43 of the Children's Act(16)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 44 of the Children's Act; Article 46 of the Labor Act(16, 17)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Articles 44-45 of the Children's Act(16)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 20 of the Constitution; Article 41 of the Children's Act(15, 16)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 30-39 of the Children's Act; Articles 28 and 56 of the Trafficking in Persons Act; Article 13 of the Tourism Offenses Act (16, 18, 19)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 26, 27, 29-31, 32, and 34 of the Children's Act; Articles 7-9 of the Tourism Offenses Act; (16, 19)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Articles 31, 36, and 37 of the Children's Act (16)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 59 of the Children's Act (1, 16)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	12	Article 30 of the Constitution (15)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 30 of the Constitution; Article 18 of the Children's Act (15, 16)

*No conscription (20)

In The Gambia children are required to attend school only until the age of 12 at which point they are permitted under Sections 51 of the Children's Act to work as an apprentice in the informal sector. This standard makes children ages 13 to 15 that are not engaged in apprenticeships in the informal sector, particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.(2, 15, 21) However, under Section 43 of the Children's Act children at age 16 are permitted to do light work; light work means work that does not jeopardize the health or safety of the child and does not interfere with school attendance.(16) Although The Gambia has laws that criminalize the use and solicitation of children for sexual intercourse, in November 2014, President Jammeh declared the government would impose the death penalty for the crime of raping a child, which should take effect September 2015.(22)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Combat forced child labor and coordinate the handling of trafficking victims, working closely with social welfare officers in police units.(1, 7) Monitor, through the operation of 5 Neighborhood Watch Groups, suspected cases of child abuse or child sexual exploitation in urban areas near tourist sites such as resorts. Operate a 24-hour hotline to address human trafficking and maintain a database of persons suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking in collaboration with the GTB. Maintain an electronic database that contains information on cases related to child protection, including those involving labor and human trafficking violations.(10, 11)
Child Protection Alliance (CPA)	Promote child rights and child protection.(13, 23, 24) Raise awareness about child exploitation and build capacity for prevention and protection. Include government departments, civil society organizations, UN agencies, NGOs, child and youth organizations, and bilateral institutions.(13)
Gambia Tourism Board (GTB)	Combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children in tourist areas.(1) Maintain a database of persons suspected of pedophilia or child trafficking in collaboration with the DSW.(11, 25)
Tourism Security Unit (TSU)	Prevent unaccompanied children from entering tourist areas and patrol tourist areas for child labor violations and criminal violations, such as commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. Has a dedicated child protection division.(1, 7, 25)
Gambia Police Force's Child Welfare Unit	Oversee all situations involving children.(24) Work with the DSW, the CPA, and other agencies and non-governmental organizations to assess and identify children engaged in the worst forms of child labor.(3)
Community Child Protection Committees (CCPCs)	Raise awareness and report cases of labor issues, including child labor, to the authorities. DSW currently operates 66 CCPCs in the country.(3, 7, 10, 26)
Neighborhood Watch Groups	Monitor for cases of child exploitation. Five existing groups established by DSW in urban areas near tourist resorts.(7) DSW provides members with allowances and cell phone credit.(7)

Law enforcement agencies in The Gambia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Department of Labor, under the Ministry of Trade, Industry, Regional Integration and Employment (MOTRIE) employed 4 labor inspectors to enforce all labor laws, including those related to child labor. This number of inspectors is insufficient for the size of the population.(6) A source indicated that inadequate transportation and fuel posed a challenge for inspectors.(1)

Gambia, The

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Children found during labor inspections are referred to the Department of Social Welfare (DSW). The Department of Labor reported it did not receive any child labor complaints during the year.(1, 6) Early in 2014, the Government tripled the budget for the DSW's child protection efforts.(7)The Department of Labor carried out unannounced inspections two or three days per week. However, the Government did not make labor inspection data accessible to the public, including the total number of inspections, sectors where inspections were conducted, notification system for inspections, type and quality of inspections, violations found, citations issued, and the severity of penalties applied.(1, 6)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Gambia Tourism Board (GTB) co-funded the installation of an electronic billboard at Banjul International Airport to warn visitors of the penalties of engaging in child sex tourism. In addition, the GTB held five seminars on child sex tourism to 190 law enforcement officers, tourism industry operators, and members of the public.(10) The Gambia Tourism Board (GTB) trained 4 police officers and 32 individuals on human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. (6) In 2014, research found no information on DSW's and the Gambia Police Force's child protection and human trafficking awareness trainings or seminars for police, immigration officers and social workers.(6)

In 2014, the Government reported investigating one human trafficking case. The Government reported there were no human trafficking prosecutions or convictions during the year.(10) Research found no information about the number of investigators responsible for enforcing criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor. (10)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Coordinate government efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. Headed by a Director and assisted by social welfare officers.(1)
National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons (NAATIP)	Coordinate, administer, and monitor the implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Act and sharing information among law enforcement agencies. Convene monthly meetings of the National TIP Taskforce.(1, 7, 25)

The National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons' (NAATIP) budget for the year was $33,000.(1, 10) This amount was sufficient to cover salaries and administrative costs, but not enough to cover the costs of training NAATIP and law enforcement officials.(1, 7) In addition, the Agency does not have its own vehicles and must rely on the Ministry of Justice.(1, 24) The Agency is developing a database to monitor human trafficking and hired a data officer to gather and compile information from all organizations involved in anti-trafficking efforts; however, data was not available during the reporting period. NAATIP investigators lack specialized training on the worst forms of child labor.(1)NAATIP officials visited several border posts and trained police, immigration, and customs officials and community leaders on human trafficking issues.(10)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of The Gambia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Employment Strategy (2010–2014)	Aims to eliminate child labor through awareness raising, promotion of primary education, implementation of ILO Convention 182, and collection and analysis of child labor data.(27)
Code of Conduct of the Gambia Tourism Authority for the Protection of Children (year?)	Seeks to raise awareness within the tourism industry and among tourists of commercial sexual exploitation of children.(1, 28) At the beginning of the peak tourism season, new hotel staff were trained on the Code.(1)
National TIP Action Plan (2012–2016)	Aims to combat human trafficking. Initially drafted by the Ministry of Justice and recently updated by NAATIP. NAATIP is responsible for implementation.(7)

Policy	Description
Program for Accelerated Growth and Employment (2012–2015)	Calls for improved social protection for children and access to education, as well as to prevent child labor, including its worst forms.(3, 29)
UNDAF (2012–2016)	Promotes improved access to education and develop child labor policies.(30)
Education Policy (2004–2015)	Outlines goals to expand school infrastructure, increase school enrollment, and improve the quality of education.(31)
The Gambia and Senegal Trafficking MOU	Coordinates the two countries' efforts to address human trafficking through meetings, information sharing, improved laws, and prevention, protection, and assistance activities. Includes the participation of 6 UN agencies and aims to develop a National Social Protection Policy and Operational Plan. (7, 32) Signed in December 2013.(7, 32)

The Government signed an MOU in 2013 that established a partnership on social protection that will focus on integrating existing social protection mechanisms in the country that target vulnerable groups, such as child laborers.(42) This partnership also aims to develop a National Social Protection Policy and Operational Plan in 2014.(42) The Government also was in the process of developing a National Children's Policy and a National Plan of Action to Combat Sexual Exploitation of Children to follow the 2004 Plan. However, neither plan has been approved.(3)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of The Gambia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Combating Child Sex Tourism Project	CPA project, funded by ECPAT Netherlands, to raise awareness about the commercial sexual exploitation of children and Tourism Offences Act among TSU, hoteliers, travel agencies, and other tourism stakeholders and provide them with Code of Conduct of the Gambia Tourism Authority for the Protection of Children.(33)
Street Children Center‡	DSW (with support from international organizations, foreign NGOs, and local businesses) drop-in center in Talinding Kunjang that provides medical care, food, and counseling to street children, including human trafficking victims and almusus.(1, 7, 25, 26) Center tries to prevent the children from returning to begging.(8, 34) Government allocated $11,500 for the functioning of the center and another $6,666 for its renovation during the reporting period.(7, 35)
Conditional Cash Transfers to the Majaalis‡	Ministry of Education (with support from NGOs) conditional cash transfer program that gives marabouts approximately $2.56 per month and food rations for each student on condition that they not force students to beg.(7) Ministry of Education provides teachers for English, mathematics, and science. Government reports that more than a thousand children are benefiting from program and plans to expand into more rural areas.(1, 35, 36)
Shelter for Trafficking Victims	DSW (with support from international organizations, foreign NGOs, and local businesses) 24-hour shelter in Bakoteh for victims of human trafficking, including children. Accommodates 48 people and provides guests with food, medical care, and counseling.(7) Over 1,000 children have received services since it opened in 2006.(7)
One-Stop Center	DSW (with the support of NGO partners) center, opened in 2013, that provides medical care, counseling, and legal services to human trafficking victims and victims of gender-based violence.(7)
Family Assistance Hotline‡	DSW 24-hour hotline through which trafficking victims may reach social welfare officers.(7)
Protect Project	USDOS-funded ChildFund project to develop national child protection system for prevention of and response to child trafficking in The Gambia. Has trained 120 government officials on child trafficking since its inception.(37)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS I & II	USDOL-funded regional projects to assist ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa sub-region.(38, 39)
Children on the Move	DSW participates in 3-year, 12-country regional project, funded by a Swiss NGO, which provides services to child trafficking victims, including repatriation.(1, 7)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of The Gambia.

Gambia, The

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

Although The Gambia has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem and reach all children vulnerable to human trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and work on the street. Furthermore, existing programs do not target children working in agriculture and domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified in that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in The Gambia (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Adopt legislation that increases the age of compulsory education to 16 so that it is commensurate with the minimum age for work.	2010 – 2014
Enforcement	Provide sufficient staffing and financial resources for effective inspection and enforcement efforts.	2013 – 2014
	Establish a mechanism for public reporting on the number of child labor complaints, investigations, and prosecutions.	2012 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure the NAATIP is provided with adequate resources.	2012 – 2014
	Provide necessary specialized training for appropriate agency officials in the NAATIP.	2012 – 2014
Government Policies	Continue monitoring and evaluating the impact of the National Education Policy on child labor, including the average number of hours worked per child.	2010 – 2014
	Approve the National Children's Policy and the National Plan of Action to Combat Sexual Exploitation of Children.	2012 – 2014
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine the activities carried out by children working in agriculture to inform policies and programs.	2013 – 2014
	Expand existing programs to prevent child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and work on the street.	2010 – 2014
	Conduct research into children in agriculture and domestic work .	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that children can complete primary school by subsidizing or defraying the cost of books, uniforms, and other fees.	2010 – 2014

Georgia

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Georgia made a minimal advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. Georgia has received an assessment of minimal advancement because the Government lacked a labor inspectorate to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws during the reporting period.<sup>1</sup>

This continued gap in enforcement delays the advancements made in eliminating child labor during the reporting period.

Although the Government participated in a project to improve its ability to enforce labor laws and adhere to international labor standards, including those related to child labor, the Government did not take steps to establish a labor inspectorate during the reporting period. Children in Georgia continue to engage in child labor in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor in forced begging. Despite these gaps, the Government did make efforts to prevent and eliminate child labor, including participating in a project to collect and analyze data on child labor in Georgia.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Although research is limited, there is evidence that children in Georgia are engaged in child labor in agriculture.(1-4) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in forced begging.(5-7) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Georgia.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	29.1 (172,378)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	92.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	31.5
Primary Completion Rate (%)		108.1

Source for primary completion rate: Data from 2012, published by UNESCO Institute for Statistics, 2015.(8)

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 3 Survey, 2005.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming, activities unknown* (1-4)
Services	Street work, including begging and collecting scrap metal* (2-4, 10-12)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation, sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (5-7, 13) Forced begging* (5-7)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

While the specific activities children are involved in are unknown, many children in Georgia are known to perform agricultural work on farms.(1, 2)

<sup>1</sup> Although past Findings on the Worst Forms of Child Labor reports have reflected the absence of a labor inspectorate in Georgia, Georgia's assessment level in previous years did not reflect the extent to which this gap in enforcement delays advancements made in eliminating child labor. Georgia has not had a labor inspectorate to monitor, inspect, and enforce child labor laws since 2006, when the Government abolished the labor inspectorate that existed at that time.

The majority of children involved in street work, including victims of forced begging, are members of the Roma and Azerbaijani Kurd ethnic minorities. In situations of forced begging as a result of human trafficking, traffickers most often operate independently with a small network of three to four children.(7)

In 2014, the number of persons seeking asylum in Georgia doubled due to ongoing conflicts in the Near East and Ukraine. The Ministry of Refugees and Accommodation does not have the capacity to accommodate this increase.(14) Refugee status has been granted to less than 10 percent of asylum seekers, and some children have been denied refugee status. Those who are denied refugee status, including children, have no legal status in Georgia and no access to education or social services, increasing their vulnerability to the worst forms of child labor.(14)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Georgia has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 4 of the Labor Code of Georgia (15)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Article 4 of the Labor Code of Georgia (15, 16)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes		Order No. 147/N, 3 May 2007 of the Minister of Labor, Health and Social Affairs 2007 "On Approving the List of Heavy, Harmful, and Hazardous Work" (10, 17)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 30 of the Constitution of Georgia (18)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Articles 143, 143-i, 143-ii, 143-iii, and 172 of the Criminal Code of Georgia; The Law of Georgia on Combating Human Trafficking (19, 20)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 171, 253, 255, 255-1, and 255-2 of the Criminal Code of Georgia (10, 20, 21)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 171 of the Criminal Code of Georgia (10, 20)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Articles 9 and 21 of the Law of Georgia on Military Duty and Military Service (22, 23)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Legislation title unknown (22-24)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Articles 2 and 9 of the Law of Georgia on General Education (17, 25)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 22 of the Law of Georgia on General Education (25)

Research did not find a public version of the List of Heavy, Harmful, and Hazardous Work for review.(26)

Although the Government has confirmed that the minimum age for voluntary military service is 18, research did not find information on the legislation that establishes this standard.

MINIMAL ADVANCEMENT

The Law on General Education makes education free through high school and compulsory for 9 years but does not specify a start or end age.(17, 25) Because children begin school at age 6, education is compulsory up to age 15.(2) The compulsory education age leaves children ages 15 to 16 vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, as they are not required to be in school but are not legally permitted to work either.

In order to convict a trafficker, the Law of Georgia on Combating Human Trafficking requires the prosecutor to prove that the trafficker “exploited” the victim. As a result of judges imposing a higher-than-intended standard of proof for this exploitation, over the last 4 years the number of human trafficking cases brought, prosecuted, and convicted fell from 33 investigations, 40 prosecutions, and 37 convictions during the 2009 – 2010 reporting period to seven, two, and zero, respectively, during the 2012 – 2013 reporting period.(27) In May 2014, the Government adopted amendments to Article 143 of the Criminal Code to define the standard of proof for exploitation, with the intention of increasing the rate of successful prosecution of cases of trafficking in persons.(7, 27)

In March 2014, the Government of Georgia ratified the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse.(28)

In November 2014, the Government adopted legislative changes on domestic violence that prohibit corporal punishment of children, which is a tool used to coerce children into begging.(3)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Health and Social Affairs (MoLHSA)	Oversee child welfare issues and address labor matters.(10) Through the Child Protection and Social Programs sub-department, receive and forward complaints of child labor violations to law enforcement agencies for investigation and prosecution.(28)
The Department of Labor and Employment within MoLHSA	Address labor and employment issues, and revise existing laws and policies to be in accordance with international standards.(17)
Social Service Agency (SSA) within MoLHSA	Administer social benefits such as targeted social assistance, health care, and vouchers for day care. Employ social service agents who identify qualifying families for services and social workers who oversee child protection and family welfare cases.(3)
Ministry of Internal Affairs (MoIA)	Investigate child labor cases, including NGO and civilian reports of potential child labor violations.(2, 10) Enforce criminal laws related to child labor and child trafficking.(2, 3)
Central Criminal Police Department within the MoIA	Lead criminal investigations of trafficking in persons, including the trafficking of children, through the Division for Combating Illicit Trafficking of Drugs, Human Trafficking, and Irregular Migration.(28) Identify human traffickers and systematize data on traffickers across various agencies through the Information-Analytical Department.(29) Investigate potential human trafficking schemes by deploying teams of two law enforcement officials in Mobile Units to investigate companies offering suspicious work opportunities abroad.(28, 30) In April 2014, the number of Mobile Units was expanded from 3 to 4.(7)
District Police Units within the MoIA	Collect information on minors within jurisdiction and visit families of these minors to inform them of their rights. Conduct classes for school teachers on children’s rights.(31)
The Prosecutor General’s Office within the Ministry of Justice	Investigate large-scale cases of child trafficking.(3)
Joint Child Referral Mechanism	Ensure interagency coordination of the enforcement of child labor laws and enumerate the procedures for referring children subject to any form of violence—including labor exploitation—to child protective services.(2, 28) Comprised of MoLHSA, the MoIA, and the Ministry of Education and Science (MoES).(32)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Georgia took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, there were no agencies empowered to enforce child labor laws in Georgia during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

The 2006 Labor Code abolished the labor inspectorate within the former Ministry of Labor, Health and Social Security. As a result, the Ministry of Labor, Health and Social Affairs (MoLHSA) lacked inspectors or other means to effectively enforce labor laws during the reporting period.<sup>(3)</sup> While the Government has taken steps to reestablish a labor inspectorate, in part with the support of an ILO technical cooperation project funded by USDOL, this was not accomplished during the reporting period.<sup>(3)<sup>2</sup></sup>

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, 16 investigators from the Division for Combating Illicit Trafficking of Drugs, Human Trafficking, and Irregular Migration are dedicated to detecting and investigating cases of human trafficking. In addition, 150 officers in the Unit on Combating Organized Crime are available to assist with human trafficking investigations when necessary.<sup>(28)</sup> In January 2014, the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MoIA) established a new anti-trafficking division in the Adjara region, a popular tourist destination and regional hub for commercial sexual exploitation in Georgia.<sup>(6, 27, 28)</sup> One month later, the MoIA and the Prosecutor's Office, assisted by the International Organization on Migration, established a Trafficking in Persons Task Force in Batumi that operates as part of the Adjara anti-trafficking division.<sup>(27)</sup> The Task Force is composed of 7 investigators and 5 prosecutors, and is designed to investigate all potential trafficking in persons cases brought by the criminal police in Batumi.<sup>(28)</sup> Task Force members also aim to identify potential victims of human trafficking by sending investigators and undercover agents to venues where victims of human trafficking are frequently forced to work.<sup>(27)</sup>

Law enforcement training includes modules on trafficking of minors.<sup>(28)</sup> Trafficking in persons trainings were held regularly throughout the year for investigators, prosecutors, and judges.<sup>(2, 27, 28)</sup> However, high turnover among human trafficking-dedicated investigators may prevent training from increasing law enforcement's investigative capacity over the long term.<sup>(27)</sup>

During 2014, the MoIA initiated two investigations into the trafficking of minors. Of the two investigations, one case involving two perpetrators was prosecuted resulting in two sentences of 14 and 11 years, respectively.<sup>(3)</sup> Victims of child trafficking are referred to the State Fund for Protection and Assistance of (Statutory) Victims of Human Trafficking, a MoLHSA program that offers shelter and psychological rehabilitation services to child victims.<sup>(3)</sup> In addition, the Prosecutor's Office is working with the U.S. Embassy to develop a Victim/Witness Coordination Service, which would provide improved outreach and coordination with victims and witnesses of crime, including victims and witnesses of child labor and child trafficking.<sup>(3)</sup>

Research found that the Police have in some instances refused to investigate cases of forced begging raised by NGOs, claiming that street begging could not be considered a violation of children's rights under the current legislation.<sup>(7)</sup>

Although the Government has established coordinating mechanisms to combat human trafficking and promote child welfare, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
Inter-Ministerial Coordination Council on Childcare	Implement the 2012 – 2015 Child Action Plan, which addresses the issues of street children and child victims of abuse and neglect and promotes the rehabilitation and social integration of street children and juvenile criminals. Comprised of representatives of the MoES, Ministry of Finance, MoIA, Ministry of Justice, the Public Defender's Office, MoLHSA, and UNICEF. <sup>(3)</sup> The council as a whole convened once in 2014. <sup>(28)</sup>

<sup>2</sup> In March 2015, the Prime Minister signed two decrees that established Georgia's labor inspectorate under the MoLHSA, and in April 2015, the MoLHSA issued a ministerial regulation stipulating the competencies of the labor inspectors. However, significant work on the part of the Government is still needed to ensure that the labor inspectorate can effectively enforce child labor laws according to international standards, including by performing quality targeted, complaint-based, and unannounced inspections and by ensuring that inspectors have the ability to assess penalties for violations of labor law.

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
The Interagency Anti-Trafficking Coordination Council for the Implementation of Measures against Human Trafficking (ICC)	Coordinate government efforts against trafficking in persons and children, including efforts to protect and rehabilitate victims.(3) Refer child victims to shelters to receive social services.(2) Chaired by the Minister of Justice and comprised of representatives from state agencies and non-state entities.(3) In February 2014, the ICC published guidelines on enforcement of laws against trafficking in persons, including establishing standards on investigation; interrogation of victims, including children; and evidence collection. The ICC also produced a set of Standard Operating Procedures for law enforcement on victim identification.(28)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Georgia has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
The 2012 – 2015 Action Plan for Child Welfare and Protection	Establishes an overarching framework to improve the welfare of children, including highly vulnerable groups like street children. Identifies the institutions responsible for carrying out activities, funding sources, and expected outcomes in a broad range of areas such as education, health, child care, public awareness campaigns, and rehabilitation programs.(2, 17, 33)
Anti-Trafficking Action Plan for 2013 – 2014	Supports implementation activities to address human trafficking, including the exploitation of children.(34)
National Human Rights Strategy 2014 – 2020†	Identifies human rights priorities, including the protection of child rights. Led to the adoption of a National Action Plan on the Protection of Human Rights 2014 – 2016, which includes objectives to strengthen provision of services to vulnerable children, such as those living and working on the streets.(35, 36)
EU Association Agreement and Association Agenda 2014 – 2016†	Outlines a framework for cooperation between Georgia and the EU. Requires Georgia to institute a number of initiatives to protect children's rights, including addressing child poverty, providing adequate resources to the Public Defender to undertake work for children, and focusing on measures to protect children against all forms of violence.(3)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In November 2014, the Government adopted a new Anti-Trafficking Action Plan for 2015 – 2016, which will increase the number of Mobile Units to detect cases of human trafficking.(28)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Georgia funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Global Research on Child Labor Measurement and Policy Development (MAP)	USDOL-funded research project implemented by the ILO in 10 countries, including Georgia, to increase the knowledge base around child labor by collecting new data, analyzing existing data, and building capacity to conduct research in this area.(37)
Improved Compliance with Labor Laws in the Democratic Republic of Georgia†	$2 million USDOL-funded grant implemented by the ILO to work with the Government to improve its ability to enforce labor laws, including child labor laws, and adhere to international labor standards.(38) Key objectives of the project include supporting the establishment of effective labor law enforcement mechanisms in Georgia through labor inspection and promoting effective tripartite cooperation.(39)
Reaching Highly Vulnerable Children in Georgia with a Focus on Children Living or Working on the Streets‡	MoLHSA program to assist children and youth living or working on the streets, supported by UNICEF and the EU and implemented by World Vision, Caritas, and Child and Environment. In 2014, began receiving Government funding through MoLHSA's Rehabilitation and Child Care Program.(7, 28) Includes the operation of four mobile street teams comprised of a social worker, a psychologist, and a former street child who serves as a mentor, who makes initial contact with street children and directs them to the program's services. Also provides three day care centers, two 24-hour crisis intervention centers, and two transitional centers that prepare children to enter long-term care.(7, 28) In 2014, the program removed at least 400 children from the street and transferred them to safe environments where they will receive education and health care.(2)

Program	Description
The State Fund for Protection and Assistance of (Statutory) Victims of Human Trafficking (SFVPA)‡	MoLHSA program to protect, assist, and rehabilitate trafficking victims and victims of domestic violence, including minors.(3, 13) Implements the Government's Rehabilitation and Reintegration Strategy, which includes operating two trafficking shelters in Batumi and Tbilisi, each staffed with a social worker to further assist victims. Funds the Assistance to Victims of Trafficking in Persons Hotline and a related Web site.(2, 32, 40) In 2014, the SFVPA employed 620 people, 30 of whom focused on trafficking in persons.(3)
The Common Information Strategy†‡	Countrywide awareness-raising campaign launched by Interagency Council that is aimed at offering assistance to victims, warning potential victims, and generating dialogue around human trafficking. Campaign included information seminars intended for target audiences such as students, street children, minorities, and internally displaced persons.(27) Also included public service announcements, regularly broadcasted on the radio by the Interagency Council, on how to avoid traffickers.(27)
Program on Provision of School Children with Free Textbooks‡*	MoES program that distributes free textbooks to all public school students and private school students from social disadvantaged families.(28) In 2014, the Government allocated $5.1 million for the program.(3)
The Georgian Language for Future Success Program*	MoES program implemented by the National Center for Teacher Professional Development that commissions teachers who are native speakers of Georgian to provide Georgian-language instruction to ethnic minority students. These teachers also assist local teachers in improving their abilities in the Georgian language.(26, 28) In 2014, 187 school teachers were sent to assist in ethnic minority schools through this program.(28)
Second Chance Education for Disadvantaged, Children with Behavior Problems and Out of School Children in Georgia‡	MoES program designed to promote inclusion of disadvantaged children, including street children, victims of forced begging, and children engaged in seasonal agricultural work into the educational system. Formerly funded in partnership with UNICEF, in 2014 the MoES took responsibility for financing and implementing the program.(28)
Social Rehabilitation and Childcare Program‡*	Government program that includes the provision of assistance to children with a high risk of abandonment and children with disabilities, as well as placement of abandoned children in foster care, guardianship, or small group homes. In 2014, received $11 million in funding.(3)
Pension Program and Targeted Social Assistance*	SSA-administered program that provides financial assistance to the poorest 10 percent of the population.(41)
UNICEF Country Program 2011 – 2015*	Joint effort by UNICEF, the Government of Georgia, and other partners from intergovernmental organizations and NGOs to improve both provision of social services to children and the protection of children's rights. Includes support of the MoLHSA and SSA program to reform child care efforts by reducing the institutionalization of children.(42) In 2014, UNICEF allocated $77,000 for capacity-building activities, including training for professionals involved with addressing the issue of children living and working on the streets.(3)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was launched during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Georgia.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Georgia (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Make the List of Heavy, Harmful, and Hazardous Work publicly available.	2014
	Increase the age of compulsory education to 16, the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Reestablish the Labor Inspectorate to enforce child labor legislation. Ensure that the Labor Inspectorate has sufficient funding to provide an adequate number of inspectors; that inspectors are capable of performing quality targeted, complaint-based, and unannounced inspections; that inspectors have the ability to assess penalties; and that data on the number and type of inspections, violations, and penalties are made publicly available.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that cases of forced begging are recognized as criminal acts and receive appropriate and thorough investigation by the Police.	2014
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to combat child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2009 – 2014
Social Programs	Ensure that all children, including those seeking asylum in Georgia, are able to access education and relevant social services.	2014
	Assess the impact that existing programs may have on child labor.	2009 – 2014

In 2014, Ghana made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government reconstituted the Human Trafficking Management Board (HTMB), which had been inactive in 2013. Additionally, the Ghana Police Service's Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) nearly doubled the number of investigators it employs and provided members with training on how to identify, investigate, and prosecute child labor cases. The Government also released the results of its Living Standards Survey Round 6, which included a subsection dedicated to child labor. However, children in Ghana continue to engage in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, including in cocoa and fishing. Enforcement of legal protections against the worst forms of child labor is severely limited due to resource constraints, and social programs do not cover all of the sectors in which children work.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Ghana are engaged in the worst forms of child labor in agriculture, including in cocoa and fishing.(1-12) In August 2014, the Government released the results of the Living Standards Survey Round 6, which estimates that 21.8 percent of all children in Ghana are engaged in child labor, with roughly half of these children engaged in hazardous work as defined by the law.(9) According to a report by Tulane University that assessed data collected during the 2013–2014 harvest season, there were an estimated 918,543 child laborers ages 5 to 17 in the cocoa sector, of which 95.7 percent were engaged in hazardous work in cocoa production.(13) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Ghana.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	43.5 (2,731,596)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	83.1
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	39.8
Primary Completion Rate (%)		98.5

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from MICS3 Survey, 2006.(15)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Land clearing,*† using machetes† and cutlasses† for weeding, collecting cocoa pods with a harvesting hook,† breaking cocoa pods,† working in the vicinity of pesticide spraying,† and carrying heavy loads† of water in the production of cocoa (4-7, 13)
	Cultivating pineapple* (7)
	Herding livestock*† (16)
	Fishing for tilapia, and to a lesser extent for mudfish,* catfish,* and electric fish,* including producing bait, nets, and fishing gear,* launching,† paddling,† and draining canoes;† diving for fish;† casting and pulling fishing nets† and untangling them underwater; sorting, picking, cleaning,† smoking,† transporting,* and selling* fish; cleaning and repairing nets,* and building and repairing boats* (2, 3, 6, 8-12, 17, 18)

Sector/Industry	Activity
Industry	Quarrying and small-scale mining, sometimes for gold, including using mercury,† digging in deep pits,‡ crushing rocks by hand,‡ carrying heavy loads, and machine operation*† (6, 17, 19, 20)
	Bricklaying* (16)
Services	Domestic work*† (16, 17, 21)
	Transporting heavy loads as kayayes (mainly girls who carry loads on their head)*† (10, 17, 22)
	Garbage scavenging,† including sorting scavenged items† and transporting items for sale*† (23)
	Street work, including begging*† and hawking* (17, 24)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (17, 25-27)
	Forced begging and forced work in agriculture; fishing, including for tilapia; artisanal gold mining; domestic work; carrying heavy loads; and street vending; each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (2, 24-30)
	Forced ritual service for girls known as trokosi * (10, 17, 22, 31)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

Some girls in the Greater Accra and Volta Regions are involved in a form of ritual servitude whereby families give a young girl to officials of a local shrine in atonement for their family members’ sins.(1, 10, 22, 31) These girls, known as trokosis, perform tasks such as fetching water, maintaining the shrines, and working on the priest’s land. Their basic needs often go unmet, and they frequently suffer sexual and physical abuse.(10, 31) There has also been an increase in the number of young girls from the Northern Region who migrate to Accra to work in markets, carrying heavy loads on their heads as kayayes.(27)

Ghana is a source, transit, and destination country for the trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation and forced labor, including in fishing.(2, 16, 24, 27) Children are subjected to commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in the Volta and Western Regions.(24, 27) Research found that child trafficking within Ghana was more predominant than transnational child trafficking.(3, 12, 27, 32) Ghanaian children are also transported to neighboring countries in West Africa as well as to Europe, the Middle East, and the United States for forced labor and commercial sexual exploitation.(24, 27)

Primary education is free and compulsory in Ghana, and the Government has taken measures to increase access to education by providing free uniforms and books to some children.(11, 33) However, in practice, children must pay for school fees and materials, which may be prohibitive for many families.(2, 9, 10, 23). In addition, although school uniforms and birth certificates are not required to attend school, children lacking these are often turned away by school authorities.(16, 34) Some children, especially girls, are reported to be sexually assaulted and harassed by teachers or classmates.(16, 35, 36) Moreover, the shortage of classrooms, overcrowding in urban schools, and poor educational infrastructure, particularly in rural areas, severely limits access to education for many children.(2, 37-41)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Ghana has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
 ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict
 UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	15	Section 89 of the Children's Act (42)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Section 91 of the Children's Act (42)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations and/or Activities for Children	Yes		Sections 91-92 of the Children's Act; article 58 of the Labor Act (42, 43)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 16.2 of the Constitution (44)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Sections 1-2 of the Human Trafficking Act (45)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Sections 107-108; 110-111; 274-277; 279-283 of the Criminal Code (46)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	No
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Armed Forces Regulations (Administration) Volume I (47-49)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 2.2 of the Education Act (33)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 2.2 of the Education Act (33)

* No conscription (50)

Ghana's laws are not comprehensive with regard to commercial sexual exploitation of children and the use of children in illicit activities. Ghana does not have laws that specifically prohibit child pornography, including possessing child pornography or benefiting from its proceeds.(51) The law also does not proscribe penalties for recruiting, using, selling, or benefiting from the proceeds of commercial sexual exploitation of adults or children. Sections 101, 107, and 108 of the Criminal Code on prostitution only apply to children 15 years and younger, leaving children ages 16 to 17 without legal protection.(46) In addition, section 107 of the Criminal Code prohibits the procurement of any person younger than age 21 for prostitution, as long as that person is not a prostitute or of "known immoral character."(46) This makes punishment dependent on how others may judge the child's moral character, which may leave some child victims of commercial sexual exploitation unprotected.(46, 52) Further, penalties prescribed by the Criminal Code for child prostitution are not sufficiently severe to deter violations. The Criminal Code also creates certain barriers to prosecution, such as allowing an offender to defend himself with a reasonable belief that the child was 16 years of age or older.(46) Additionally, there are no laws prohibiting the use of children in illicit activities, including the offering, or procuring of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs.(22, 39, 46)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Employment and Labor Relations (MELR)	Enforce all labor laws and oversee child protection committees at the district level.(10, 16, 53) Implements the Ghana Child Labor Monitoring System (GCLMS) through the National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC), which enables communities to identify, report on, withdraw, and coordinate services for children in exploitative labor.(6, 17, 54-57)
District Assembly's District Social Welfare Officer and Social Services Subcommittee	Ensure child labor laws are enforced, perform spot checks on workplaces, and investigate child labor violations in the informal sector. Provide employers with information about how to comply with child labor laws.(2, 16, 39)

Organization/Agency	Role
Ghana Police Service (GPS)	Make arrests and conduct investigations related to forced child labor, child trafficking, commercial sexual exploitation, and the use of children for illicit activities. Enforce anti-trafficking laws through the Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) of the Criminal Investigation Division, which leads the Government's efforts to implement the 2005 Human Trafficking Act.(10, 17, 24, 27) Maintain a 24/7 phone line for reporting crimes, including human trafficking violations and a Web site to promote awareness about human trafficking.(1) The Domestic Violence and Victims Support Unit works with the AHTU to investigate cases of child trafficking.(17, 27) AHTUs maintain a permanent presence in all 11 of Ghana's police regions.(17, 58)
Economic and Organized Crime Office's Human Trafficking Unit	Share responsibility with the GPS's AHTU for investigating and prosecuting cases of human trafficking. Recover proceeds of human trafficking and provide ongoing training on preventing human trafficking.(27)
Office of the Attorney General	Prosecute child labor and child trafficking crimes.(17)
Ministry of Gender, Children, and Social Protection (MGCSP)'s Human Trafficking Secretariat	Oversee the creation, implementation, and review of Ghana's human trafficking policies. Ensure proper monitoring, evaluation, and data collection through the human trafficking database, in cooperation with the local NGO Rescue Foundation, with funding from the UK High Commission.(17, 27) Convene the Human Trafficking Management Board (HTMB).(27)
Ghana Immigration Service	Maintain a desk at headquarters in Accra, as well as 10 regional desks throughout the country, each staffed with 10-15 officers who work on human trafficking cases.(27)
Community Child Protection Committees (CCPCs)	Participate in the GCLMS to monitor, prevent, and withdraw children from the worst forms of child labor in cocoa, as well as other sectors, in more than 600 communities nationwide.(17) Report cases to the GPS, the MGCSP's Department of Social Welfare (DSW), or traditional authorities, who work with the police to launch investigations.(17, 53)

Law enforcement agencies in Ghana took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Employment and Labor Relations (MELR) had 97 labor inspectors responsible for the enforcement of all labor laws in the country, an increase from the 94 inspectors employed in 2013.(1, 17) However, this number remains insufficient to adequately enforce labor laws.(17) Research did not find how much funding the MELR received in 2014. Inspectors did not have sufficient resources, including office facilities, transportation, and fuel, to conduct inspections. Additionally, inspectors are not authorized to assess penalties.(1, 17, 51)

During the reporting period, the MELR provided training to 40 police officers in the Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU) on how to identify, investigate, and prosecute cases of child labor. Additionally, 47 of the MELR inspectors were trained on child labor issues, Ghana's child labor legal framework, the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor, and best practices for labor inspections.(17) However, the MELR's Child Labor Unit (CLU) reports that child labor training opportunities are insufficient for the number of inspectors and the scope of the child labor problem, particularly at the district level.(17, 59) Additional training is needed in areas that include communicating using basic information technology; effectively carrying out labor inspections; interpreting labor laws; and learning report writing techniques.(17) Research also found that judges, police, and labor officials were sometimes unfamiliar with the provisions of the law that protect children.(16, 27)

Article 124 of the Labor Code permits inspectors to conduct unannounced visits in any type of workplace. Although inspectors had proactively planned child labor inspections, it is not known whether they had made unannounced visits.(17, 43) Research did not find information on the number or quality of the inspections conducted, whether inspections were carried out in all sectors, the number of child labor violations found, and the penalties assessed.(1, 16, 58) It is also not known how many calls the Ghana Police Service's (GPS) 24/7 hotline received related to child labor. A lack of resources further hindered the MELR's ability to effectively carry out its mission.(17) This resulted in a general lack of disaggregated and reliable data on the labor violations, the penalties imposed, and what type of assistance provided to victims.(10) Research did not find information about whether a referral mechanism exists between labor law enforcement and social service providers.

Criminal Law Enforcement

During the reporting period, the GPS's AHTU employed 102 investigators located throughout Ghana. This is a significant increase from the 58 investigators employed in 2013.(1, 27, 58) Despite the increase in the number of investigators, it is still insufficient to allow the AHTU to fulfill its mandate.(17) Information on the number of officials employed by the GPS to investigate other worst forms of child labor is unavailable. Research did not find how much funding the AHTU had received in 2014, although the AHTU indicated that funding was insufficient to maintain adequate logistical support, office facilities, transportation, and fuel. (17, 27) This lack of resources prevented the AHTU from investigating all the reports of human trafficking that were received. (27) Investigators typically receive training from the ILO, the IOM, UNICEF, INTERPOL, and the Department of State-funded International Law Enforcement Academy in Botswana. In 2014, the Director of the AHTU conducted training on trafficking in persons for new police officers at the police academy, and two AHTU officers travelled to Indonesia for INTERPOL training on trafficking in persons and smuggling. (17, 27, 51)

Although the AHTU refers victims of child trafficking to social service providers, there is not a formal referral mechanism in place. Moreover, there is no referral system for victims of other worst forms of child labor violations. (17, 27) In August 2014, the AHTU and a local NGO rescued 33 victims of child trafficking destined for the Lake Volta Region. (58, 60, 61) The Human Trafficking Secretariat reported that it had rescued 15 victims of child trafficking, conducted 94 investigations, prosecuted 15 cases, and convicted six individuals in 2014, double the number of convictions in 2013. (25, 27, 58) Additionally, coordination among agencies responsible for child labor laws is weak. (17)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSCCL)	Oversee coordination, implementation, and monitoring of the National Plan of Action (NPA) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor and programs targeting the worst forms of child labor, including reviewing and endorsing project proposals and supporting the implementation of the GCLMS. (17, 62-64) Led by the MELR's Child Labor Unit (CLU) and comprising three subcommittees: (1) Policy Advisory, Education, and Skills Training; (2) Advocacy, Social Mobilization, and Child Labor Monitoring; and (3) Cocoa, Fisheries, and Mining and Quarrying. (2, 10, 17, 64, 65) Other members include representatives from the Ministries of the Interior, Food and Agriculture, Education, Local Government and Rural Development, Women and Children's Affairs, Employment and Social Welfare; employers' and workers' organizations; NGOs; the Ghana Cocoa Board; and international organizations. (65).
MELR's Child Labor Unit (CLU)	Coordinate child labor issues and provide technical support to ministries, departments and agencies, employers' and workers' organizations, and international agencies such as the ILO, the IOM, and UNICEF. (2, 39) Under the supervision of the NSCCL, lead implementation of the NPA. (27) In 2014, conducted three awareness-raising sessions in the Lake Volta Region, bringing together students, business owners, and traditional chiefs to discuss concrete ways to educate community members about child labor issues. (27)
Human Trafficking Management Board (HTMB)	Advise the MGCSP on human trafficking policy and promote prevention and rehabilitation strategies. Chaired by the MGCSP's Human Trafficking Secretariat, which convenes quarterly meetings of the intersectoral board that include police, immigration officials, local government, Ministries of Health and Education, and a parliamentarian, among others. (17) Comprised of five subcommittees: Monitoring and Evaluation; Research, Data Collection Information Dissemination, and Prevention; Legal Framework and Policy Development; Finance and Resource Mobilization; and Rescue, Rehabilitation, and Reintegration. (27)
MGCSP's Department of Social Welfare (DSW)	Implement cross-sectoral programs on social protection to combat child labor. (17)
National Partners Forum (NPF)	Discuss and coordinate interventions to address the worst forms of child labor in the cocoa sector. Convened by NPECLC within the MELR and comprised of district assemblies, NGOs, trade unions, and civil society organizations. (1, 66)

In 2014, the CLU was allocated a budget of approximately $10,960 to coordinate activities to address child labor, and an additional $5,950 to conduct activities for the World Day Against Child Labor. However, the CLU only received approximately $2,273 of the budgeted $10,960 in addition to the money received for World Day Against Child Labor activities. (17, 27, 58) The Government of Ghana reconstituted the HTMB, which was inactive in 2013, and it provided orientation for all its members in October 2014. (17) During the inaugural meeting, the Minister of Gender, Children, and Social Protection urged members to prioritize coordination and collaboration with partner organizations. (27) Although the Board is supposed to meet quarterly, it only met once in 2014, citing insufficient funding as the reason. (17, 27) The National Steering Committee on Child Labor (NSCCL) met three times in 2014. (17, 51)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Ghana has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action (NPA) for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2009-2015)	Provides a comprehensive framework to significantly reduce the worst forms of child labor by 2015 and identifies specific roles for various ministries, NGOs, and civil society.(2, 27) Aims to reduce all forms of child labor but prioritizes nine key sectors: child trafficking; trokosi ; mining and quarrying; fishing; commercial sexual exploitation; kayayes and carrying heavy loads; agriculture; domestic work; and street vending.(27) Creates a framework for the new GCLMS that addresses all sectors in which the worst forms of child labor are present.(17, 27, 39) Helps coordinate 23 institutions and government agencies to combat child labor through data collection and analysis.(6, 67) Led by the CLU under the supervision of the NSCCL.(17)
Hazardous Child Labor Activity Frameworks	Comprises both the Hazardous Child Labor Activity Framework and the Hazardous Child Labor Activity Framework for the Cocoa Sector, which were developed in consultation with workers' and employers' organizations and prohibit hazardous activities for children. The existing framework extends protection to all child workers and supplement Ghana's existing laws on child labor.(68, 69)
ECOWAS Regional Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labor, Especially the Worst Forms (2013-2015)	Aims to eliminate worst forms of child labor in West Africa by 2015 through the implementation of a regional action plan with 14 other ECOWAS countries.(70) In 2014, met to discuss actions taken since Ghana's 2013 Peer Review, progress of the Regional Action Plan's implementation, and the ILO's Study on "Child Labor and Educational Marginalization in West Africa."(71, 72)
2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol (2010 Declaration) and Its Accompanying Framework of Action	Under this joint declaration, the Governments of Ghana, Côte d'Ivoire, the United States, and the International Cocoa and Chocolate Industry provide resources and coordinate with key stakeholders on efforts to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas.(73, 74) The Governments take steps to ensure that all project efforts implemented under the Declaration and Frameworks align with Ghana's national action plans in order to promote coherence and sustainability.(62, 73, 74)
Ministry of Food and Agriculture's Child Labor Strategic Plan (2013-2015)	Aims to improve coordination and monitors implementation of efforts to address child labor in the agriculture, cocoa, and fishing sectors by 2015. Works with farmers and fishermen to increase their livelihoods and their awareness of child labor.(75, 76)
UNDAF (2012-2016)	Aims to provide education or vocational training opportunities to children ages 5 to 17 withdrawn or prevented from engaging in child labor as part of Ghana's National Development Priority for Human Development, Productivity, and Employment.(77)
Education Strategic Plan (2003-2015)*	Seeks to improve access to and the quality of education by 2015, particularly at the primary level, by increasing opportunities for out-of-school and hard-to-reach children, providing scholarships to needy students, and improving education infrastructure.(38)
Free Compulsory Universal Basic Education (F-CUBE)	Aims to enable all children in Ghana to attend primary school by improving educational quality, improving access to education, raising the enrollment of hard-to-reach and out-of-school children, and increasing the management efficiency of the education sector.(17, 38)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Ghana funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government also has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
National Program for the Elimination of Child Labor in Cocoa (NPECLC)‡	Housed within the MELR, provides awareness-raising in cocoa-growing communities, increases access to education, builds institutional capacity for organizations combatting child labor, and aims to strengthen legal protections for child workers as part of the NPA. Oversees interventions to eliminate the worst forms of child labor at the community level.(17, 53, 78, 79) In 2014, established nine Information Communication Technology (ICT) centers and held a training workshop for ICT teachers in February. NPECLC also focused on scaling up the GCLMS and completed a trainers' manual on how to identify and withdraw children from situations of exploitative child labor.(58, 79) By the end of 2014, NPECLC was monitoring and supporting 7,191 children at risk of child labor.(79)

Program	Description
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa by Strengthening Subregional Cooperation through ECOWAS (ECOWAS I) (2009-2014)	$7.95 million USDOL-funded, 5-year project implemented by the ILO with direct interventions to accelerate progress on the elimination of the worst forms of child labor in Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Nigeria. Supported Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa subregion by providing policy and capacity-building support for all ECOWAS states.(80) By the close of the project in April 2014, had withdrawn or prevented 5,536 children from the worst forms of child labor in fishing, mining, and agricultural production in Ghana and provided livelihoods services to 440 Ghanaian households. Helped establish CCPCs in 120 communities in the country.(81, 82)
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa by Strengthening Subregional Cooperation through ECOWAS (ECOWAS II) (2010-2014)	Linked to the ECOWAS I project, a $5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO with direct interventions in Benin, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, and Nigeria. Supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa subregion by providing policy and capacity-building support for all ECOWAS states.(83) In Ghana, worked with the Government to support the initial stages of implementation of GCLMS in 20 communities. By the close of project in April 2014, the project had also provided education services to 1,004 children and livelihoods services to 1,124 households in Ghana.(84)
Towards Child Labor Free Cocoa Growing Communities in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana through an Integrated Area-Based Approach (2010-2015)	$10 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO. In support of the 2010 Declaration of Joint Action to Support the Implementation of the Harkin-Engel Protocol, goal was to reduce the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-producing areas in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana by providing direct services to communities.(40, 73) In Ghana, aimed to rescue more than 2,500 children and provide livelihood assistance to at least 1,000 households.(40) Works with the Government to support the GCLMS in cocoa-growing areas. By the end of 2014, the project had withdrawn or prevented 2,879 children from engaging in child labor by providing educational services and provided livelihood services to 2,145 households in Ghana.(63)
Survey on Child Labor in West African Cocoa-Growing Areas (2012-2015)	$1.9 million USDOL-funded, 3-year research project implemented by the Payson Center at Tulane University. Supports the collection of nationally representative survey data on child labor in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana to assess the prevalence of the worst forms of child labor in cocoa-growing areas. (55, 62, 85) Coordinates with the Government and works with government statistical experts to build the country's capacity to implement future child labor surveys.(62) In Ghana, the project conducted a nationally representative survey in the cocoa sector during the 2013-2014 harvest season.(13)
Industry-Funded Projects in Support of the 2010 Declaration	Aims to reduce the prevalence of child labor in Ghana's cocoa-growing areas, including by improving children's access to education and increasing household incomes.(73, 74, 86) Funding provided by the cocoa industry in Ghana as follows: Ferrero, $1.14 million; Hershey, $600,000; and Mondelez International, $1.55 million.(62) Global Issues Group provided $2 million for a project being implemented in both Ghana and Côte d'Ivoire.(62)
Follow-up to the resolution on child labour statistics adopted at the 18th International Conference of Labor Statisticians through methodological development and expansion of child labor data collection	$3.5 million USDOL-funded, 4-year project implemented by the ILO. Included a subsurvey on child labor within the Ghana Statistical Service's Ghana Living Standards Survey.(87) Results were not available during reporting period.(1, 87)
Reintegration and Repatriation Services‡	The HTMB's Human Trafficking Fund provides financial support to human trafficking victims, including children; entails Government-assisted repatriating of victims when possible.(17, 27) The AHTU and DSW operate shelters and provide support services to victims of child trafficking with support from the IOM and UNICEF.(12, 27, 32) NGOs also operate shelters for victims of exploitative child labor in the Lake Volta Region.(27)
Anti-Human Trafficking Project (2014-2016)†	French Ministry of Foreign Affairs-funded, 3-year project to fight human trafficking in the Gulf of Guinea; implemented locally by Plan Ghana.(26) Provides training to Civil Society Organizations and shelters on delivering psychosocial support to victims of human trafficking, legal framework, reporting needs, and advocacy. Aims to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officials to investigate and prosecute crimes.(26, 88)
Livelihoods Empowerment Against Poverty*‡	Government-funded conditional cash transfer program that provides monetary grants to households on the condition that children attend school and not engage in child labor. Aims to reach 300,000 households by 2015.(1, 17, 27, 39) Provided approximately $1.5 million to 76,913 households in 103 districts throughout the country in 2014.(17)
Child Protection Compact Partnership†	US Department of State and Government of Ghana compact that aims to reduce child trafficking through increased efficiency and improved coordination between the MGCSF, Ministry of the Interior, GPS, and the Office of the Attorney General. Aims to improve prosecution and conviction of individuals guilty of child trafficking and improve protection for victims.(72)

Program	Description
Empowering Cocoa Households with Opportunities and Education Solutions (2007-2015)*	World Cocoa Foundation, USAID, and the International Chocolate and Cocoa Industry project implemented by World Education and Winrock that strengthens cocoa-growing communities by expanding education for youth and young adults; empowers community based organizations; and improving household livelihoods.(89)
Programs to Assist Kayayes *‡	DSW program, with the support of community based organizations, that provides rehabilitation and reintegration facilities for kayayes . The Women's Development Fund provides microcredit and income-generating activities for the mothers of kayayes .(22)
Education Programs*‡	Government-funded programs under F-CUBE that aim to increase school attendance and enrollment.(17, 27, 38) Ghana School Feeding Program, ongoing since 2005, aims to reduce malnutrition among children attending school in selected schools by providing meals and covering other incidental costs.(2, 16, 17, 39, 52) Capitation Grant Scheme pays school fees for all students attending public primary schools.(2, 16, 17, 39, 52) Ghana Education Service provides scholarships to girls, and free housing to female for junior and senior high school teachers.(16) Also places girls' education officers at the regional and district levels, and mobilizes communities to enroll more girls in school.(16)
National Health Insurance Scheme*‡	As part of the NPA, which aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor, this government program waives health insurance premiums for children, requiring a minimal registration fee.(17, 39)
Millennium Villages*	Seeks to achieve the UN Millennium Development Goals by increasing universal primary education, improving access to health care and sanitation services, and providing livelihood assistance to agricultural families. Established early childhood education centers in villages with no primary schools.(90)
Public Awareness Campaigns‡	Various Ministry-funded programs that aim to raise awareness of child trafficking and educate community members on human trafficking issues.(27) In 2014, Head of the Human Trafficking Secretariat conducted eight public outreach appearances on radio and television. Additionally, the Secretariat collaborated with two NGOs to show a documentary on child trafficking on 540 inter-city buses that travelled throughout the country.(27)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

† Program was approved during the reporting period.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Ghana.

Insufficient funding has limited the Government's ability to provide shelters for victims of child trafficking, and those that exist are frequently understaffed and lack adequate security.(10, 12, 26, 27, 88) Although the Government has worked closely with industry; NGOs; and international organizations to implement child labor programs in cocoa, fishing, and mining, the size of these programs remains insufficient to address the scope of the problem. Research found no evidence of programs to assist children involved in commercial sexual exploitation or forced labor in domestic work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Ghana (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ratify the UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography.	2013 – 2014
	Prohibit child pornography and ensure laws prohibit the possession of child pornography or benefitting from its proceeds.	2014
	Strengthen protections for children against commercial sexual exploitation by removing barriers to prosecution and ensuring that penalties are sufficiently severe to deter violations and that the law applies equally to all children, regardless of age, moral standing, or occupation.	2014
	Ensure laws prohibit children from being used, offered, or procured for the production and trafficking of drugs.	2009 – 2014
Enforcement	Allocate and disburse adequate funding to support enforcement efforts, including by increasing the number of labor inspectors and AHTU investigators; and providing them with adequate training, particularly in the areas of using basic information technology; effectively carrying out labor inspections; interpreting labor laws; and report writing techniques.	2009 – 2014

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Enforcement	Strengthen law enforcement by authorizing inspectors to assess penalties for labor violations.	2014
	Collect and make public statistics on the number of inspections and investigations conducted, violations found, penalties assessed, prosecutions, and convictions under child labor and trafficking laws, as well as the disaggregated data on the number of calls related to child labor made to the Ghana Police Service's 24/7 hotline.	2010 – 2014
	Strengthen coordination among agencies responsible for child labor issues, and develop a referral system between labor and criminal law enforcement agencies and social service providers.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Ensure the Human Trafficking Management Board, National Partners Forum, and the Child Labor Unit receive adequate funding to convene on a regular basis and fulfill their respective coordinating roles.	2013 – 2014
Government Policies	Integrate child labor elimination and prevention strategies into the Education Strategic Plan.	2013 – 2014
Social Programs	Increase access to education by: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ Ensuring an adequate number of classrooms;</li> <li>■ Improving school infrastructure;</li> <li>■ Eliminating school-related fees; and</li> <li>■ Ensuring school administrators and teachers allow children without birth certificates and uniforms to attend school.</li> </ul>	2010 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing social programs may have on addressing child labor.	2013 – 2014
	Ensure that shelters that assist child trafficking victims have adequate funding, staff, and security to provide appropriate services.	2014
	Create, replicate, and/or expand effective models for addressing exploitative child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and forced domestic work..	2009 – 2014

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Grenada made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government passed the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act, which specifically prohibits the trafficking of children for labor and commercial sexual exploitation. The Government participated in the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor discussions on the prevention and elimination of child labor, and continued to support programs that provide school meals, uniforms, and transportation costs to students of low-income families. While the worst forms of child labor do not appear to be a problem in Grenada, the Government's ability to prevent children from becoming engaged in exploitative work is limited due to a lack of express prohibitions against children's involvement in hazardous work and illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Research did not indicate that child labor, including its worst forms, exists in Grenada.(1)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Grenada has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 1).

Table 1. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

Convention	Ratification
 ILO C. 138, Minimum Age	✓
ILO C. 182, Worst Forms of Child Labor	✓
 UN CRC	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on Armed Conflict	✓
UN CRC Optional Protocol on the Sale of Children, Child Prostitution and Child Pornography	✓
 Palermo Protocol on Trafficking in Persons	✓

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 2).

Table 2. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 32 of the Employment Act (2)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	No
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	No
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes		Article 25 of the Employment Act; Article 4 of the Constitution (2, 3)
Prohibition of Child Trafficking	Yes		Article 10 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (1, 4)
Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes		Articles 137 and 188 of the Criminal Code; Article 12 of the Electronic Crimes Act; Article 10 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act (1, 4-6)

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 10 of the Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act; Article 12 of the Electronic Crimes Act (4, 5)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A†
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	N/A†
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	16	Articles 2 and 15 of the Education Act (7)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 16 of the Education Act (7)

† No standing military (8)

The Prevention of Trafficking in Persons Act came into force in June 2014. Article 10 of this act prohibits the human trafficking of children, including for commercial sexual exploitation, and establishes penalties of 25 years imprisonment, a fine of approximately $370,000, or both.(1, 4)

Although the worst forms of child labor do not appear to exist in Grenada, gaps exist in the legal framework to prevent children from involvement in the worst forms of child labor. Article 32 of the Employment Act allows holiday employment for children under the age of 16 and does not specify the minimum age, types of work, or hours permitted for this work.(2) There are no existing provisions prohibiting the employment of children in hazardous work.(1, 9) Although the law prohibits the commercial sexual exploitation of children, research did not indicate there are laws prohibiting the use of children in other illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.(10)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including in its worst forms (Table 3).

Table 3. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor, Child Protection Authority, Royal Grenada Police Force, Ministry of Social Development and Housing, and Ministry of Education truancy officers	Enforce laws related to child labor and school attendance.(1)

Law enforcement agencies in Grenada took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. In 2014, the Ministry of Labor (MOL) employed seven labor inspectors responsible for general labor inspections.(1) MOL labor inspectors did not receive training related to child labor during the reporting period. MOL had a budget of approximately $279,311 to carry out all activities during the reporting period, including labor inspections.(1) There were no complaints or inspections related to child labor during the reporting period. In 2014, members of the Royal Grenada Police Force received training from the U.S. Government on sex crimes, including on components relating to children.(1) During the reporting period, the perpetrator of a 2013 child pornography was convicted and fined approximately $7,400; both the victim and the perpetrator received counseling. There were no new criminal investigations, prosecutions, or convictions relevant to child labor during the reporting period.(1)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for mechanisms to coordinate efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms.

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for policies to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, the Government has policies that may contribute to the prevention of child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Table 4. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Child Protocol (2013–2014)	Implements and strengthens the Child Protection and Adoption Act of 2011. Includes guidelines on areas such as coordination of government efforts related to the protection of children, investigations, and referrals to appropriate social services for victims of child labor, including its worst forms.(1, 10)
Child Abuse Reporting Guidelines (2013–2014)	Requires health care employees to report cases of child abuse.(1)
Poverty Reduction Strategy (2014)†	Supports compulsory school attendance.(1)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In September 2014, Grenada participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. Held in Bridgetown, Barbados, these discussions promoted the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector, uphold workers' rights, and prevent and eliminate child labor.(11, 12)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

As there is no evidence of a problem, there appears to be no need for programs to address child labor, including its worst forms. However, there is no current research on whether the worst forms of child labor exists in Grenada.(1) In 2014, the Government of Grenada funded programs that may have an impact on child labor (Table 5).

Table 5. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
School Feeding Programs‡	Government program that provides free breakfast and subsidized lunches to primary school students and students in 11 secondary schools; waives lunch fee for students who cannot afford to pay.(10, 13, 14) The Government decreased funding for school meals by approximately $18,500 in 2014.(1)
Uniform and Transportation Allowances‡	Government program that covers costs of uniforms and transportation to schools for students from low-income families.(10) The Government increased support for transportation fees in 2014.(1)

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Grenada.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would continue the prevention of child labor, including its worst forms, in Grenada (Table 6).

Table 6. Suggested Government Actions to Prevent Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Ensure the law conforms to international standards on light work in order to protect children engaged in holiday employment.	2014
	Establish specific provisions prohibiting hazardous work for children.	2009 – 2014
	Prohibit the use of children in illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.	2011 – 2014
Social Programs	Conduct research to determine whether any of the worst forms of child labor exist in Grenada.	2009 – 2014

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Guatemala made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The Government signed the Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle, a development initiative that includes among its many goals increasing educational and vocational training opportunities for youth and combatting human trafficking. The Government also implemented the Public Policy on Human Trafficking and Comprehensive Protection of Victims (2014–2024), establishing government-run shelters for victims of human trafficking. The Secretariat Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons' (SVET) budget reached $2 million, the highest in its history. Also, for the first time in Guatemala, six individuals were prosecuted by the Public Ministry and convicted of trafficking for labor purposes. However, children in Guatemala are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture and in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking. The lack of government resources, inability of the labor inspectorate to impose fines, and inadequate judicial enforcement of court orders remain key challenges for enforcement efforts to combat the worst forms of child labor. The Government delayed payments to recipients from the conditional cash transfer program, Mi Bono Seguro, and there is a lack of social programs targeting sectors in which children are known to engage in exploitative labor, such as domestic work and agriculture, as well as other sectors.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guatemala are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture. Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking.(1) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guatemala.

According to the 2014 National Survey of Employment and Earnings (ENEI), in Guatemala, approximately 66 percent of child labor occurs among males and 65 percent of overall child labor is found in agriculture. The ENEI also indicates that 69.2 percent of child labor is found among indigenous children.(1)

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	7-14 yrs.	19.2 (597,561)
Attending School (%)	7-14 yrs.	90.1

	Domestic work† (5, 6, 9)
Services	Street work,† including vending,† performing,† begging, and shoe shining† (1, 6)
	Garbage scavenging*† and working in garbage dump† (6, 9)
	Forced labor in agriculture, production of garments,* domestic work, garbage scavenging,* street begging* and vending (1, 6, 11)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Used in the production of pornography* (13-16)
	Commercial sexual exploitation sometimes as a result of human trafficking (1, 11, 17)
	Used in illicit activities, including stealing* and transporting contraband as a result of criminal and gang recruitment* (6, 11)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined hazardous by national law or regulation as understood under Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3 (a)–(c) of ILO C. 182.

Approximately 40 percent of Guatemalans belong to three different ethnic groups representing more than 26 linguistic communities, among which the majority are indigenous.(18, 19) Government data indicate that more than two-thirds of working children in Guatemala are of indigenous heritage.(1) Traditionally, indigenous Guatemalan children have traveled to the Mexican border region of Guatemala to work; however, more recently, minors from other Central American countries have also migrated to the Mexican border for work, often times as a stop before they migrate farther north.(20)

In 2014, there was a steep increase in unaccompanied children from Guatemala, El Salvador and Honduras, leaving their countries to travel to the United States. These children often lack economic and educational opportunities and are vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor, including commercial sexual exploitation and recruitment by gangs.(21, 22) Gangs in Guatemala, including transnational criminal organizations, use children to commit illegal acts such as stealing and transporting contraband; some of these children are reported to be victims of human trafficking.(11) Children often emigrate to escape such violence and extortion by gangs, in addition to searching for economic opportunities and family reunification. Once en route, they are also vulnerable to human trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation.(17, 23, 24)

Reports indicate that children in Guatemala are victims of commercial sexual exploitation in the tourist areas of Antigua, Puerto Barrios, Rio Dulce, Lake Atitlan communities, Peten, and Guatemala City.(25)

In the last several decades, the Government has improved access to education for children; however, many significant challenges still remain. In 2014, only 60 percent of children completed the sixth grade in Guatemala.(26) In the Western Highlands, indigenous children only complete an average of 5.6 years of school. Moreover, there are still not enough qualified teachers who can speak and teach in all of the children’s native languages in the country nor are there classrooms materials available in all languages.(10)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guatemala has ratified all key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes		Article 27 of the Penal Code (32)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	Yes	18	Article 57 of Law of Integral Protection of Children and Adolescents, No. 27-2003 (34)
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 57 of Law of Integral Protection of Children and Adolescents, No. 27-2003 (34)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	15	Article 74 of the Constitution (28, 35)
Free Public Education	Yes		Article 74 of the Constitution; Article 1 of Government Agreement 226-2008 (28, 36)

Guatemalan law is not fully consistent with international standards regarding child labor. Article 150 of the Labor Code allows the Ministry of Labor and Social Security (MTPS) to authorize children under age of 14 to work under exceptional circumstances, including if the MTPS determines that children must work to support their family due to poverty.(27) However, in 2006, the President's Office and the MTPS signed an agreement reiterating the Labor Code's prohibition of the employment of children under the age of 14 and committing the MTPS to grant exceptions to the minimum age for work only in very special cases.(29)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor and Social Security's (MTPS) Inspection Division (IGT)	Enforce child labor laws, including prohibitions on the worst forms of child labor.(37) Inspect businesses to find cases of the worst forms of child labor and respond to child labor complaints and refer children to government social services. Refer complaints to the MTPS Adolescent Workers Protection Unit. Refer children to government social services.(10, 38-40) Establish periods for employers to remedy the violations found. Refer cases of violations that are not remedied within the specified time periods to labor courts, which review the cases and impose sanctions, as appropriate.(9, 27)

Organization/Agency	Role
Secretariat of Social Welfare and Departmental Social Welfare Offices	Establish and manage a national protocol for identifying and assisting child victims of commercial sexual exploitation.(41) In the case of Departmental Social Welfare Offices, coordinate services for children outside of Guatemala City.(40)
National Civil Police (PNC)	Maintain Trafficking in Persons and Forced Labor Unit located within the Special Investigation Police, and a hotline to receive reports of suspected child trafficking cases. Investigate cases of child trafficking.(1, 11, 24)
Public Ministry, Public Prosecutors' Office (MP)	Maintain an Anti-Human Trafficking Unit, which conducts investigations on all forms of trafficking in persons.(13, 24, 42)
Human Rights Ombudsman	Receive complaints regarding child victims of trafficking in persons.(23)
Solicitor General's Office (PGN)	Receive complaints regarding the exploitation of children. Also initiate legal proceedings to protect children in cases of violation of criminal law and ensure the legal representation of children whose rights have been infringed.(13, 23, 24) Maintain a Child Rescue Unit that assesses the risk of children whose rights have been violated, including making a determination on whether the children should remain with family members, and request appropriate protection measures.(13)

Law enforcement agencies in Guatemala took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the MTPS employed approximately 300 inspectors throughout Guatemala; however, 40 of the inspectors do not conduct inspections, but rather serve as conciliators who attempt to address and resolve labor violations rather than forwarding them for judicial review and potential sanction.(1, 10) There are no inspectors specifically dedicated to child labor, but there are approximately 20 “emergency” inspectors. These inspectors are employed full time to respond to complaints from minors or those received on behalf of minors.(1, 10, 43) However, all labor inspectors were trained in child labor in 2014. The Labor Inspectorate had a budget of approximately $3.7 million in 2014, which is a small increase from $3.6 million in 2013.(1) Only 3 percent of the MTPS's budget is allocated for carrying out inspections. Labor inspectors, especially outside of Guatemala City, still lack the necessary resources, such as vehicles and fuel, to carry out inspections.(1, 6, 44)

According to the MTPS, in 2014, 161 inspectors conducted a total of 30,552 inspections, 5,823 of which were in industries and areas that are at high risk of employing children, including in agriculture, manufacturing, textiles, and the service industry. This represents a 22 percent decrease from 2013 in inspections in such high-risk industries and areas.(10) The MTPS holds press conferences announcing certain sectors it will target, after which these sectors undergo random inspections. Inspections are generally announced, but inspectors also may conduct unannounced inspections, such as in response to a child labor complaint.(1) There are reports that question the quality of child labor inspections, in particular the scope and coverage across industries.(1)

In 2014, the MTPS received and investigated 102 child labor complaints. During the reporting period, 101 children were found in the worst forms of child labor. In 11 cases of child labor in violation of the labor code, inspectors chose to conciliate with employer instead of referring the case to the court.(1) Approximately 59 of the 102 cases are still pending. During inspections, 87 adolescents and 14 children were found in unlawful child labor.(1, 10) The children were referred to social services, including to the MP and the PGN.(1, 10)

As a result of these inspections, the MTPS referred 18 cases of child labor violations to labor courts. Research did not uncover whether the 18 cases were a result of complaint-driven inspections or total child labor inspections.(10) In total, $1.19 million was assessed by the labor courts for labor law violations in 2014, of which only $486,000 was collected. Information is not available on the amount assessed and collected specifically for child labor violations, however.(1) In general, there are significant delays in penalizing employers for labor law violations, in large part because the MTPS cannot directly impose fines and must transfer cases of violations to the labor courts for their review and sanction, as appropriate.(1, 40, 45)

In 2013, the Guatemalan Government and the United States Government signed an Enforcement Plan to resolve a labor law enforcement case brought by the United States under the Dominican Republic-Central America-United States Free Trade Agreement (CAFTA-DR). The Plan specified a set of actions for the Government of Guatemala to undertake in order to improve the enforcement of its labor laws.(1, 46) The Enforcement Plan included passage of legislation that would allow the MTPS to

Guatemala

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

recommend sanctions to the labor courts and for the courts to adopt those sanctions through an expedited process. Enforcement of child labor laws would also be expedited with this legislation.(1, 46) However, Guatemala failed to fully implement the Enforcement Plan within the prescribed timeframes, including enacting the referenced sanction legislation.(1, 47) As a result, in September 2014, the United States announced that it would proceed with the case before a CAFTA-DR arbitral panel and has been in dispute settlement proceedings.(47)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the National Civil Police maintained a team of approximately 45 investigators for crimes against children and adolescents, and the Special Investigative Police maintained a team of approximately 50 investigators specializing in human trafficking. The 50 investigators participated in a 1-month course on human trafficking.(1) In addition, the MP increased the size of its Anti-Trafficking Unit to 32 staff members, and the number of prosecutors from three to seven. The MP funded a certification program on gender issues for every member of the Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Prosecutors Office.(1, 25) The Anti-Trafficking Unit Office received additional vehicles in 2014, which assisted in conducting investigations outside of the capital. However, limited resources still present challenges for both inspecting cases and processing violations outside of the capital.(1)

In 2014, there were 402 new human trafficking investigations, which involved 539 suspected or convicted perpetrators. As a result of the investigations, 50 trafficking cases (involving 62 perpetrators) were brought to trial.(25) Two of the cases involved the commercial sexual exploitation of young girls. These cases are currently in the prosecution phase. Eight cases involved trafficking for labor purposes.(25) Seven of these cases are still pending; however, charges have been filed for these cases. Six of the cases involved victims under the age of 18.(10) In one investigation, 44 indigenous children trafficked from rural areas to the city for forced begging were rescued.(1)

There were 20 convictions for trafficking offenses in 2014. This includes the first 6 convictions of individuals for trafficking for labor purposes ever in Guatemala.(25) In the 6 convictions, children were forced to work in a bar serving alcohol to customers and drinking alcohol with them. The average penalty for each conviction was 21 years in prison with a fine of $90,000.(10, 25) No information is available on the number of complaints received involving child victims of trafficking.

The National Civil Police still needs additional staff and resources to effectively enforce criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.(1, 24) Additionally, inadequate training and lack of resources for investigations outside of Guatemala City further negatively impact the Government's response to these crimes. However, there are reports that indicate that the quality of investigations may be improving.(1, 13, 24)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAPETI)	Coordinate government policies and efforts to combat child labor. Led by the Vice President's Office and composed of several government ministries, including the MTPS and the Ministry of Social Development (MIDES), as well as representatives from industry associations and trade unions.(9, 37, 43)
Departmental Commissions for the Eradication of Child Labor (CODIPETIs)	Coordinate government efforts to combat child labor at the departmental or regional level. Composed of department-level representatives of the agencies that form the CONAPETI.(1)
MTPS Executive Secretariats	Operate nine Executive Secretariats throughout the country to coordinate the efforts of NGOs and local government agencies on child labor.(37)
Secretariat Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons (SVET)	Coordinate all government efforts against trafficking in persons (TIP), including for commercial sexual exploitation of children and forced child labor. Operate under the auspices of the Vice President's Office.(23, 24) Establish and oversee TIP networks in all departments that respond to trafficking cases and provide support for victims.(25)
Inter-Institutional Commission Against Trafficking (CIT)	Develop and manage initiatives to combat human trafficking. Coordinated by SVET and co-chaired by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs; includes 28 government and civil society institutions.(13, 23, 24)

In 2014, the National Commission for the Eradication of Child Labor (CONAPETI) met twice, and a technical-level secretariat within CONAPETI met every month. During the year, the Secretariat Against Sexual Violence, Exploitation, and Trafficking in Persons (SVET) received a budget of approximately $2 million, an increase from $1.1 million in 2013, and the Inter-Institutional Commission against Trafficking met on a monthly basis.(1, 25, 48) SVET launched networks in 10 additional departments, and there are now a total of 32 networks, reaching every department in Guatemala. As part of its $2 million budget, SVET received more than $700,000 for the operation of three new trafficking shelters.(25) In February 2014, SVET hosted a regional anti-trafficking in persons conference for civil society and other governments in the region.(11) During the reporting period, SVET trained 148,598 government and non-government staff in prevention of trafficking in persons.(25)

Although there have been improvements in interagency coordination, research found that Guatemala continues to lack effective coordination among government institutions and civil society actors who provide services and protection to children whose rights have been violated.(1, 13)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guatemala has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
Roadmap toward the Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala	Aims to eliminate the worst forms of child labor in Guatemala by 2015 and integrate child labor issues into anti-poverty, education, and health programs. Calls for legal reform to remove exceptions to the minimum age in the Labor Code.(45)
Alliance for Prosperity in the Northern Triangle†	Aims to create economic growth, increase educational and vocational training opportunities for youth, and reduce violence in Honduras, Guatemala, and El Salvador, in part to reduce the number of unaccompanied minors who leave Guatemala and other Central American countries for the United States and who are vulnerable to human trafficking. Signed by the presidents of each country in 2014.(49-51)
Action Plan to Make Guatemala Free From the Worst Forms of Child Labor (2013–2015)	Specifies actions for government agencies to implement the Roadmap toward the Elimination of Child Labor in Guatemala. Includes three advisors in Guatemala City and one in each departmental capital.(1)
Protocol for Providing Comprehensive Health Care to Children and Adolescents in the Worst Forms of Child Labor	Requires public health workers to input information about any child whose injuries may have been labor-related into a database. Implemented by the Ministry of Public Health and Social Assistance.(9, 52)
Intra-Institutional Coordination Protocol to Assist Child Laborers	Sets guidelines for the MTPS inspectors to identify child laborers, remove children from the worst forms of child labor, and coordinate services for such children with other government agencies.(31)
Public Policy on Human Trafficking and the Comprehensive Protection of Victims (2014–2024)†	Includes a National Plan of Strategic Action that directs the Government's actions on preventing and combatting human trafficking.(13) Replaces the Public Policy on Human Trafficking and the Comprehensive Protection of Victims (2007–2017) Plan and includes the creation of SVET-run TIP shelters, and in 2014, 2 new shelters were launched.(1, 25)
Central American Regional Coalition to Combat Human Trafficking	Aims to improve government and civil society efforts to combat human trafficking in Central America. Includes the participation of civil society organizations and the national police and public prosecutor's offices in Central America, including those of the Government of Guatemala.(13, 53) Includes MOU Between El Salvador and Guatemala on Protecting Trafficking Victims and the Illicit Trafficking of Migrants which Establishes actions for the Governments of Guatemala and El Salvador to improve the protection of trafficking victims and reduce the trafficking of migrants along the Guatemala-El Salvador border. Includes a focus on improving services for children.(13, 54)
Urban Social Protection Strategy	Seeks to prevent children from engaging in street work and to increase training and employment opportunities for youth.(9)
Declaration of the Regional Initiative: Latin America and the Caribbean Free of Child Labor†	Aims to increase regional cooperation on eradicating child labor by 2020 through signatories' efforts to strengthen monitoring and coordination mechanisms, government programs, and South-South exchanges. Reaffirms commitments made in the Brasilia Declaration from the Third Global Conference on Child Labor (October 2013) and signed by Guatemala at the ILO's 18th Regional Meeting of the Americas in Lima, Peru (October 2014).(55-57)

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

In September 2014, Guatemala participated in the First Meeting of the Working Groups of the XVIII Inter-American Conference of Ministers of Labor to foster continued dialogue and cooperation on labor issues throughout the Americas. Held in Bridgetown,

Barbados, these discussions promoted the exchange of information on policies and programs that seek to formalize the informal sector, uphold workers' rights, and prevent and eliminate child labor.(58)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Guatemala funded and participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Conditional Cash Transfer Program ( Mi Bono Seguro )*‡	MIDES program that provides cash assistance to families with school-aged children, conditioned on children's school attendance. Served nearly 772,000 beneficiaries in 2014.(9, 10, 59)
Food Assistance Program ( Mi Bolsa Segura )*‡	MIDES program that provides food assistance to poor families, with the requirement that their children attend school. During 2014, assisted approximately 225,000 families, a moderate increase from 197,000 families in 2013. (10, 60, 61)
Young Protagonists ( Jóvenes Protagonistas )*‡	MIDES program that provides at-risk adolescents with training and formative activities outside of school hours. Regularly attended by 55,000 youth in 2014, a significant increase from 36,000 in 2013.(59, 62, 63)
Over-Age Population Educational Program	Office of Bilingual Education program for child workers ages 12 to 17. Allows children who started school late due to work to finish 6 years of schooling in 2 years.(10)
My First Employment ( Mi Primer Empleo )*‡	MIDES program that places working-age youth in apprenticeship programs and grants them on-the-job training and a monthly stipend. In 2014, served 665 youth.(52, 59, 64)
Zero Hunger Pact ( Pacto Hambre Cero )*‡	Government programs to combat malnutrition, increase access to education, and reduce the economic vulnerability of approximately 701,000 families. In 2014, the Zero Hunger Pact had an annual budget of $102 million from $252.7 million in 2013.(9, 10, 65)
TIP Referral and Grant Funding‡	Government program that provides funding to NGOs to provide shelter and services to child victims of trafficking for commercial sexual exploitation. In 2014, the Government provided $1.1 million to two NGOs.(25)
Education and Monitoring Program for the Eradication of Child Labor (2012–2014)	$1.3 million Government of Spain-funded, 2-year project implemented by ILO-IPEC that aims to strengthen public policies and government capacity to combat child labor in 19 countries in the Americas, including Guatemala. In 2014, carried out several activities to strengthen the work of the CONDEPTIs, which included developing information systems on the worst forms of child labor in Guatemala.(66)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Guatemala.

In 2014, budget shortfalls prevented the Government from providing funding on-time to beneficiaries of the conditional cash transfer program (Mi Bono Seguro). As a result, by the end of October 2014, only 43% of Mi Bono Seguro's budget had been distributed to beneficiaries.(67) There is some evidence that, due to irregular disbursement of funds, many parts of the country did not receive payments for Mi Bono Seguro in the last quarter of 2014.(10) However, a report indicates that despite the delayed funding issue during the last quarter of 2014 with Mi Bono Seguro, the Government provided program beneficiaries payments outside of Guatemala City, reaching hundreds of thousands of families in all 22 departments, with the highest participation in Quiché, Alta Verapaz, Huehuetenango, and San Marcos.(10, 68)

In 2014, the Government increased funding for assistance to child victims of trafficking for the purpose of commercial sexual exploitation. However, a source indicates that government-run shelters for vulnerable children, including child trafficking victims, lacked sufficient translators for children who speak roughly two dozen Mayan languages, causing difficulties in service provision.(11)

Additionally, although the Government of Guatemala has implemented programs to assist children and families with conditional cash transfers, food assistance, and education services, research found no evidence that there are Government programs to specifically design to assist children, especially indigenous children, in domestic work, agriculture, and children who perform other types of hazardous work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guatemala (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Remove exceptions to the minimum age for work within Article 150 of the Labor Code that are inconsistent with international standards.	2010 – 2014
Enforcement	Increase resources for labor inspections, including vehicles and fuel, particularly for inspections outside of Guatemala City and ensure that inspections are conducted across all industries.	2009 – 2014
	Apply penalties to violators of child labor laws.	2014
	Make information publicly available on whether employers have been sanctioned for child labor violations, have paid the fines imposed, and have remedied the underlying violations.	2011 – 2014
	Authorize the MTPS legislatively to issue sanctions for labor law violations, including in cases of child labor or at a minimum, enact legislation to allow the MTPS to recommend sanctions to the labor courts for the courts to review and adopt through an expedited process.	2014
	Eliminate significant delays in the process for penalizing labor law violators, including in cases of child labor, at a minimum, by enacting legislation authorizing the MTPS to make fine recommendations and expediting the process for the judiciary to adopt such recommendations, issue fines, order and enforce remediation of labor law violations.	2012 – 2014
	Make information publicly available on the number of complaints received involving child victims of trafficking.	2014
	Increase resources for the law enforcement agencies responsible for receiving complaints and investigating child commercial sexual exploitation, forced labor, trafficking, and violations of child labor laws.	2013 – 2014
	Dedicate more resources and staff to the PGN to improve service provision for child trafficking victims and also to the National Civil Police to improve enforcement of criminal laws related to the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2014
Coordination	Strengthen coordination efforts to institutionalize relationships between civil society representatives and government agencies that provide services to child victims of the worst forms of child labor.	2013 – 2014
Social Programs	Ensure that there is geographical coverage of existing anti-poverty programs to guarantee that the programs reach families living in both urban and rural areas.	2013-2014
	Initiate social programs to address child labor, especially with a focus on indigenous children, in agriculture, domestic work, and for children who perform other types of hazardous work.	2009 – 2014
	Assess the impact that existing social programs may have on addressing child labor.	2009 – 2014

Guinea

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

In 2014, Guinea made a moderate advancement in efforts to eliminate the worst forms of child labor. The National Transition Council approved a new Labor Code that defines the worst forms of child labor in accordance to international standards and includes prohibitions against minors performing work that is dangerous or harmful to their physical or moral health. The Government also extended the National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons for an additional year and funded a center to protect victims of child trafficking. However, children in Guinea are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture, and in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining. The Government lacks a coordinating mechanism and national policy to address all relevant worst forms of child labor. In addition, there are limited resources for the systematic enforcement of child labor laws and social programs to combat child labor are insufficient to adequately address the extent of the problem. During the last half of 2014, the Government had to redirect most of its resources to address an outbreak of Ebola Virus Disease (EVD). Hundreds of children became ill or lost parents during the outbreak and schools were closed from June through December.

I. PREVALENCE AND SECTORAL DISTRIBUTION OF CHILD LABOR

Children in Guinea are engaged in child labor, including in agriculture.(1-4) Children are also engaged in the worst forms of child labor, including in mining.(3-7) According to the National Survey on Child Labor and Trafficking (2010), more than 40 percent of children ages 5 to 17 were engaged in child labor in Guinea. In addition, more than 76 percent of children ages 5 to 11 and 88 percent of children ages 12 to 15 were performing hazardous work.(3) The survey also revealed that the incidence of child labor was higher in rural areas than in urban areas.(3, 6) Table 1 provides key indicators on children's work and education in Guinea.

Table 1. Statistics on Children's Work and Education

Children	Age	Percent
Working (% and population)	5-14 yrs.	32.3 (1,152,064)
Attending School (%)	5-14 yrs.	49.6
Combining Work and School (%)	7-14 yrs.	19.2
Primary Completion Rate (%)		61.5

Source for all other data: Understanding Children's Work Project's analysis of statistics from Demographic and Health Survey (DHS), 2012.(9)

Based on a review of available information, Table 2 provides an overview of children's work by sector and activity.

Table 2. Overview of Children's Work by Sector and Activity

Sector/Industry	Activity
Agriculture	Farming,* clearing land,* and carrying heavy loads* in the production of cashews, cocoa, and coffee (1, 3, 10-12)
	Harvesting lumber,* peanuts,* coconuts,* and cotton* (7, 11)
	Herding livestock* (3, 11)
Industry	Capturing and processing fish* (3, 4, 6, 13, 14)
	Quarrying† sand* (11)
	Mining† gold and diamonds (3-5, 11, 14, 15)
	Manufacturing,* activities unknown (1, 3, 6)

	Working in restaurants* and informal cottage industries,* including as waitresses* (1, 3, 22)
	Domestic work (3, 4, 19, 23-25)
Categorical Worst Forms of Child Labor‡	Collecting scrap metal* and waste* (7)
	Forced labor as market vendors* and in domestic work,* mining,* herding,* fishing,* and farming,* each sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (3, 5, 6, 25)
	Commercial sexual exploitation* sometimes as a result of human trafficking* (1, 5)
	Forced begging by Koranic teachers (4, 5, 13, 14, 19, 21)

* Evidence of this activity is limited and/or the extent of the problem is unknown.

† Determined by national law or regulation as hazardous and, as such, relevant to Article 3(d) of ILO C. 182.

‡ Child labor understood as the worst forms of child labor per se under Article 3(a) – (c) of ILO C. 182.

In Guinea, it is a traditional practice to send children to Koranic teachers to receive an education. However, some Koranic teachers (marabouts) force their students (talibés) to beg for more than 12 hours a day without adequate food or shelter; the students must then surrender the money they have earned to their teachers.(5, 14, 26, 27) In addition, through the system of confiage, parents who are unable to care for their children send them to relatives or strangers who are expected to provide food, shelter, and schooling in exchange for the children performing housework.(4, 19) In practice, some of these children receive care and an education, while many become domestic workers and are victims of labor exploitation and abuse.(3, 4, 19)

Children are sent to the coastal region of Boke for forced labor on farms, and to Senegal for education in Koranic schools, where some may be forced to beg.(5, 13) Some Guinean boys and girls are subjected to forced labor in gold mining, including in Senegal and Mali. Girls may be trafficked into domestic work and commercial sexual exploitation in Nigeria, Côte d'Ivoire, Benin, Senegal, Greece, France, Belgium, and Spain.(3, 5, 13)

Although the Constitution guarantees free compulsory primary education, in practice, this provision is not enforced effectively, as many children do not attend school. The lack of school infrastructure; cost of school fees, uniforms, and supplies; shortage of teachers; and reported school violence impede access to education, which may increase the vulnerability of children to the worst forms of child labor.(3, 11, 13, 26) In addition, many children in Guinea are not registered at birth. Unable to prove their citizenship, unregistered children may have difficulty accessing services such as education.(1, 13, 22, 25)

In 2014, Guinea suffered from an Ebola Virus Disease (EVD) outbreak that resulted in more than 1,900 deaths.(14, 28) The Government issued policies to reduce person-to-person contact, especially in work spaces, and to increase the number of health screenings, close schools, and impose travel restrictions.(29, 30) The EVD outbreak may have impacted the Government's ability to address the worst forms of child labor.(14)

II. LEGAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Guinea has ratified most key international conventions concerning child labor (Table 3).

Table 3. Ratification of International Conventions on Child Labor

The Government has established laws and regulations related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 4).

Table 4. Laws and Regulations Related to Child Labor

Standard	Yes/No	Age	Related Legislation
Minimum Age for Work	Yes	16	Article 137.5 of the Labor Code; Article 412 of the Child Code (31, 32)
Minimum Age for Hazardous Work	Yes	18	Articles 2-4 of Order 2791 Working Conditions for Employees Aged Under 18 Years; Article 137.4 of the Labor Code (16, 32)
Prohibition of Hazardous Occupations or Activities for Children	Yes	Yes	Articles 415-418 of the Child Code; Articles 2 and 4 of Order 2791 Working Conditions for Employees Aged Under 18 Years; Article 135 of the Mining Code; Article 137.6 of the Labor Code (16, 31-33)
Prohibition of Forced Labor	Yes	Yes	Article 337 of the Penal Code; Article 4 of the Labor Code; Article 397 of the Child Code (31, 32, 34)

Prohibition of Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children	Yes	Yes	Articles 329 and 331 of the Penal Code; Article 137.6 of the Labor Code; Articles 356-360 of the Child Code (31, 32, 34)
Prohibition of Using Children in Illicit Activities	Yes	Yes	Article 137.6 of the Labor Code; Article 383 of the Child Code (31, 32)
Minimum Age for Compulsory Military Recruitment	N/A*
Minimum Age for Voluntary Military Service	Yes	18	Article 429 of the Child Code (31)
Compulsory Education Age	Yes	13	Legislation Unknown (23)
Free Public Education	Yes		Articles 23 of the Constitution (35)

* No conscription (36)

In January 2014, the National Transition Council approved a new Labor Code that defines the worst forms of child labor in accordance to international standards.(7, 32) The Labor Code also contains prohibitions against minors performing work that is dangerous or harmful to their physical or moral health.(7, 32) However, the law does not prohibit hazardous occupations and activities in all relevant child labor sectors, including agriculture. A more specific list of hazardous child labor activities in all relevant sectors has been developed but was not approved during the reporting period.(14)

Guinean law is not completely consistent with international standards regarding child labor. The minimum age provisions in the Labor Code do not extend to children under age 18 who engage in unpaid or temporary work, particularly in agriculture or domestic work.(23, 25, 32) In addition, although article 2.6 of Order 2791 prohibits children under 18 to work in mines and quarries, article 135 of the Mining Code allows children between 16 and 18 years of age to work in mines and quarries as assistants, leaving the possibility for children to work in hazardous activities.(33)

In Guinea, children are only required to attend 6 years of primary school, through age 13. Since the minimum age for work is 16, children ages 14 and 15 are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labor as they may have completed primary school but are not yet legally permitted to work.(13, 23)

III. ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government has established institutional mechanisms for the enforcement of laws and regulations on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 5).

Table 5. Agencies Responsible for Child Labor Law Enforcement

Organization/Agency	Role
Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Labor Inspection Service	Enforce labor laws and investigates Labor Code infractions, including those regarding child labor, in the formal sector. The Ministry also provides advice to workers and employers, and conducts studies and research on social issues upon the request of MOL.(6, 37) MOL also chairs the Child Labor Monitoring and Surveillance System, which includes the National Coordination Unit in the National Directorate of Employment and various prefectural committees.(6)
Office for the Protection of Gender, Children and Morals (OPROGEM) Special Police Unit	Enforce laws related to the protection of minors, including the worst forms of child labor. Also a member of the National Committee to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP).(1, 5, 7)
Ministry for Social Action, Promotion of Women and Children (MASPFE)	Provide protection and social services for victims of child labor and human trafficking.(13)

Criminal law enforcement agencies in Guinea took actions to combat child labor, including its worst forms. However, research found no evidence that labor law enforcement agencies took such actions during the reporting period.

Labor Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Ministry of Labor's (MOL) Labor Inspection Service employed 53 inspectors, with 33 located in regional offices and 20 in Conakry.(7, 14) Given the prevalence of child labor in the country, the number of labor inspectors is inadequate. Research did not reveal information about whether inspectors were trained on child labor issues in 2014 or the notification system for inspections. Information on the number, type, and quality of inspections; and child labor law violations found is also unavailable. Labor inspections typically are limited to large firms in the formal employment sector. The majority of children work outside the formal sector, including in agriculture and street work.(7) The Labor Inspection Service does not have authority to determine or assess penalties.(14) Reports indicate there is a lack of trained staff, equipment, transportation, and funding to conduct effective child labor inspections and legal proceedings.(4, 5, 14)

Criminal Law Enforcement

In 2014, the Office for the Protection of Gender, Children and Morals (OPROGEM) employed a total of 56 agents, 33 located in regional offices and 23 in Conakry.(14) Information about whether agents received training on child labor in 2014 is unavailable. Given the prevalence of child labor in the country, the number of criminal law enforcement agents is inadequate. During the reporting period, OPROGEM handled 400 criminal cases related to child abuse, although it is unclear how many involved child labor.(14) Most of these cases were referred for prosecution; however, the Ministry of Justice has brought very few of these cases to trial. While a referral mechanism exists between criminal law enforcement agencies and social welfare services, the social services available to victims of the worst forms of child are not adequate to meet current needs.(14) OPROGEM remained understaffed, underfunded, and without adequate office supplies, transportation, and fuel to enforce laws related to the worst forms of child labor effectively and provide immediate victim assistance.(4, 5, 14)

IV. COORDINATION OF GOVERNMENT EFFORTS ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Although the Government has established a coordination mechanism on human trafficking, research found no evidence of mechanisms to coordinate its efforts to address child labor, including all its worst forms (Table 6).

Table 6. Mechanisms to Coordinate Government Efforts on Child Labor

Coordinating Body	Role & Description
National Committee to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP)	Coordinate anti-human trafficking efforts, including for children. Led by the Ministry for Social Action, Promotion of Women and Children (MASPFE) and includes representatives from the Ministry of Justice; the Ministry of Security's OPROGEM; as well as various members of governmental agencies, including the MOL, the police, NGOs, and other stakeholders involved in human trafficking issues.(5, 7, 38)
Committee for Monitoring, Protection, and Defense of the Rights of the Child	Implement, coordinate, and monitor government efforts on child protection.(13, 14, 22)

Guinea

MODERATE ADVANCEMENT

Although the National Committee to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (CNLTP) and the Committee for Monitoring, Protection, and Defense of the Rights of the Child met irregularly throughout the year to implement activities, the effectiveness of such committees were hampered by budget constraints.(5, 14, 26)

V. GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

The Government of Guinea has established policies related to child labor, including its worst forms (Table 7).

Table 7. Policies Related to Child Labor

Policy	Description
National Plan of Action to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons (2009-2014)	Provides the strategy to combat human trafficking in Guinea, including for children. The Government extended the initial National Plan (2009-2011) through 2014.(4, 5, 7)
A World Fit for Children (2002-2015)	Sets mandatory procedures for governmental institutions to assist children by increasing their access to quality education; protecting children against child labor, exploitation, and violence; and combating HIV/AIDS.(39)
Education Sector Program (2015-2017)*†	Addresses the welfare of children, which includes initiatives regarding health, education, legal protection, and access to clean water. Overseen by the Ministry of Education and implemented in partnership with UNICEF and the World Bank.(40, 41)
PRSP (2013-2015)*	Provides a framework for Guinea's growth and poverty reduction agenda. Aims to improve access to and the quality of education and increase food security; employment opportunities for youth; and protection for and programs to assist women, children, and vulnerable groups.(42)
National Policy on Birth Registration*	Aims to register the birth of all children under age 8 by 2015.(43)

* Child labor elimination and prevention strategies do not appear to have been integrated into this policy.

† Policy was approved during the reporting period.

Although the Government has a National Plan of Action to Fight Against Trafficking in Persons, research found no evidence of a policy on other worst forms of child labor.(7, 23)

VI. SOCIAL PROGRAMS TO ADDRESS CHILD LABOR

In 2014, the Government of Guinea participated in programs that include the goal of eliminating or preventing child labor, including its worst forms. The Government has other programs that may have an impact on child labor, including its worst forms (Table 8).

Table 8. Social Programs to Address Child Labor

Program	Description
Eliminating the Worst Forms of Child Labor in West Africa and Strengthening Sub-Regional Cooperation through ECOWAS I and II	USDOL-funded regional projects that supported ECOWAS to strengthen its role in combating the worst forms of child labor in the West Africa subregion by providing policy and capacity-building support to all ECOWAS states.(44, 45)
Plan Guinea-Conakry Program*	Program that changes the attitudes and behaviors that are preventing children from realizing their rights. Strengthens the capacity of key actors to respect children's rights in the areas of education, survival, and protection.(19)
Country Program-Guinea*	WFP-funded, 4-year program to improve elementary school attendance through the provision of 100,000 meals to students and the promotion of girls' education.(46) Provides school meals to 735 government-run, rural schools nationwide—this represents 21 percent of all rural schools in Guinea.(26, 46, 47)
Center in Ratoma, Conakry*‡	Government program that helps vulnerable children reintegrate into society.(7)

* The impact of this program on child labor does not appear to have been studied.

‡ Program is funded by the Government of Guinea.

Although Guinea has programs that target child labor, the scope of these programs is insufficient to fully address the extent of the problem, particularly in agriculture, domestic work, mining, and street work.

VII. SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT ACTIONS TO ELIMINATE THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR

Based on the reporting above, suggested actions are identified that would advance the elimination of child labor, including its worst forms, in Guinea (Table 9).

Table 9. Suggested Government Actions to Eliminate Child Labor, Including its Worst Forms

Area	Suggested Action	Year(s) Suggested
Legal Framework	Increase the minimum age for compulsory education to correspond with the minimum age for work.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that the law prohibits hazardous occupations and activities in all relevant child labor sectors, including agriculture.	2014
	Ensure that the law's minimum age provisions apply to children who do unpaid or temporary work, particularly in agriculture or domestic work.	2009 – 2014
	Ensure that all children are prohibited from participating in hazardous mining.	2010 – 2014
Enforcement	Increase the resources, training, and number of criminal law agents and labor inspectors responsible for enforcing laws related to child labor in order to provide adequate coverage of the workforce.	2009 – 2014
	Collect and make publicly available information on the number, type, and quality of labor inspections; number of labor law violations and convictions related to the worst forms of child labor.	2011 – 2014
	Ensure the labor inspectorate has authority to determine and assess penalties.	2014
	Ensure that labor inspections are conducted in all sectors, including those with a high prevalence of child labor.	2010 – 2014
	Ensure that all cases of child labor are investigated and prosecuted appropriately.	2010 – 2014
Coordination	Establish coordinating mechanisms to address child labor, including in all its worst forms.	2010 – 2014
