

U. S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Employees' Compensation Appeals Board

In the Matter of BARRY L. EDMOND and U.S. POSTAL SERVICE, POST OFFICE, Tacoma, Wash.

*Docket No. 97-2204; Submitted on the Record;
Issued May 14, 1999*

DECISION and ORDER

Before MICHAEL J. WALSH, GEORGE E. RIVERS,
WILLIE T.C. THOMAS

The issue is whether the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs abused its discretion by refusing to reopen appellant's case for merit review under 5 U.S.C. § 8128(a) on the grounds that his application for review was not timely filed and failed to present clear evidence of error.

The Board has duly reviewed the case with respect to the issue in question and finds that the Office did not abuse its discretion by refusing to reopen appellant's case for merit review as the request was untimely made and presented no clear evidence of error.

The only decision before the Board on this appeal is the Office's May 13, 1997 decision, denying appellant's request for a review on the merits of its decision dated April 24, 1995.¹ Because more than one year has elapsed between the issuance of the Office's April 24, 1995 decision and May 24, 1997, the date appellant filed his appeal with the Board, the Board lacks jurisdiction to review the prior Office decision.²

To require the Office to reopen a case for merit review under section 8128(a) of the Federal Employees' Compensation Act,³ the Office's regulations provide that a claimant must: (1) show that the Office erroneously applied or interpreted a point of law; (2) advance a point of law or fact not previously considered by the Office; or (3) submit relevant and pertinent evidence not previously considered by the Office.⁴ To be entitled to a merit review of an Office decision

denying or terminating a benefit, a claimant also must file his or her application for review within one year of the date of that decision.⁵ When a claimant fails to meet one of the above standards, it is a matter of discretion on the part of the Office whether to reopen a case for further consideration under section 8128(a) of the Act.⁶ The Board has found that the imposition of the one-year time limitation does not constitute an abuse of the discretionary authority granted the Office under section 8128(a) of the Act.⁷

In its May 13, 1997 decision, the Office properly determined that appellant failed to file a timely application for review. The Office rendered its last merit decision on the issue appealed on April 24, 1995 and appellant's request for reconsideration was dated February 21, 1995, which was clearly more than one year after April 24, 1995. Therefore, appellant's request for reconsideration of his case on its merits was untimely filed.

The Office, however, may not deny an application for review solely on the grounds that the application was not timely filed. For a proper exercise of the discretionary authority granted under section 8128(a) of the Act, when an application for review is not timely filed, the Office must nevertheless undertake a limited review to determine whether the application establishes "clear evidence of error."⁸ Office procedures provide that the Office will reopen a claimant's case for merit review, notwithstanding the one-year filing limitation set forth in 20 C.F.R. § 10.138(b)(2), if the claimant's application for review shows "clear evidence of error" on the part of the Office.⁹

To establish clear evidence of error, a claimant must submit evidence relevant to the issue which was decided by the Office.¹⁰ The evidence must be positive, precise and explicit and must be manifest on its face that the Office committed an error.¹¹ Evidence which does not raise a substantial question concerning the correctness of the Office's decision is insufficient to establish clear evidence of error.¹² It is not enough merely to show that the evidence could be

⁹ Federal (FECA) Procedure Manual, Part 2 -- Claims, Reconsiderations, Chapter 2.1602.3(b) (May 1996). The Office therein states:

"The term 'clear evidence of error' is intended to represent a difficult standard. The claimant must present evidence which on its face shows that the Office made a mistake (for example, proof that a schedule award was miscalculated). Evidence such as a detailed, well-rationalized medical report which, if submitted before the denial was issued, would have created a conflict in medical opinion requiring further development, is not clear evidence of error and would not require a review of the case on the Director's own motion."

construed so as to produce a contrary conclusion.¹³ This entails a limited review by the Office of how the evidence submitted with the reconsideration request bears on the evidence previously of record and whether the new evidence demonstrates clear error on the part of the Office.¹⁴ To show clear evidence of error, the evidence submitted must not only be of sufficient probative value to create a conflict in medical opinion or establish a clear procedural error, but must be of sufficient probative value to prima facie shift the weight of the evidence in favor of the claimant and raise a substantial question as to the correctness of the Office decision.¹⁵ The Board makes an independent determination as to whether a claimant has submitted clear evidence of error on the part of the Office such that the Office abused its discretion in denying merit review in the face of such evidence.¹⁶

In the present case, with his request for reconsideration of the April 24, 1995 decision, appellant submitted a personal statement claiming that he believed he could not physically perform the job of tow truck driver, various documents concerning his attempt to obtain a position with the employing establishment and a new medical report from Dr. Alan B. Wood accompanied by a physical capacity evaluation report. The personal statement is a lay opinion on a medical issue and hence has no probative medical value.¹⁷ Further, the paperwork regarding appellant's attempt to obtain a position with the employing establishment is irrelevant to the issue of appellant's wage-earning capacity determination. Hence, none of this evidence demonstrates clear evidence of error in the April 24, 1995 decision, on its face. The report from Dr. Wood, which opined that appellant's condition was stable and healed and did not address whether appellant could perform the job of tow truck driver, also did not demonstrate any clear evidence of error on its face on the part of the Office in its April 24, 1995 decision, as the Office properly ascertained. Therefore, the Board now finds that it is indeed insufficient to reopen appellant's case for further consideration on its merits.

As this evidence does not raise a substantial question as to the correctness of the prior August 19, 1992 Office decision, or shift the weight of the evidence in favor of the claimant, it does not, therefore, constitute grounds for reopening appellant's case for a merit review.

In accordance with its internal guidelines and with Board precedent, the Office properly performed a limited review of this evidence to ascertain whether it demonstrated clear evidence of error, correctly determined that it did not and denied appellant's untimely request for a merit reconsideration on that basis.

The Office, therefore, did not abuse its discretion by refusing to reopen appellant's case for merit review under 5 U.S.C. § 8128(a) on the grounds that his application for review was not timely filed and failed to present clear evidence of error.¹⁸

Accordingly, the decision of the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs dated May 13, 1997 is hereby affirmed.

¹⁸ As the only limitation on the Office's authority is reasonableness, abuse of discretion is generally shown through proof of manifest error, clearly unreasonable exercise of judgment, or actions taken which are contrary to both logic and probable deductions from known facts. Daniel J. Perea, 42 ECAB 214 (1990). No such abuse of discretion was evidence here.
